THE GLUTEN IN WHEAT

Relative Porportions Between the Gluten and Starch in Various Soils. The relative proportion between the gluten and starch differs in different countries, and also on different soils: but the gluten being by far the more valuable of the two, any slight increase in its percentage would greatly improve the wheat. Our wheats have the reputation of possessing gluten in large proportions, and in many parts of the world they are sought eagerly for seed. But, explains American Cultivator, a great deal of this has been due to the fact that the wheat has been grown on the virgin soil of the northwest, where the rich nitrogenous matter has been collecting for centuries. Wheat grown upon the what had become of them. The farmer's virgin soil of this country is so much superior to that of many other countries back no more. THE GLUTEN IN WHEAT.

Relative Perportions Between the Gluten The relative proportion between the gluten and starch differs in different countries, and also on different soils: but the gluten being by far the more valuable of the two, any slight increase in its percentage would greatly improve the wheat. Our wheats have the reputation of possessing gluten in large pro portions, and in many parts of the world they are sought eagerly for seed. But, deal of this has been due to the fact that the wheat has been grown on the virgin soil of the northwest, where the rich from the hole. Mr. Benton arrived just nitrogenous matter has been collecting for centuries. Wheat grown upon the virgin soil of this country is so much stick fell upon his head and he went 150 pounds of wheat from Australia and

The object of cultivating wheat then is to increase the quantity of gluten, and ford Post. the application of manure for this pur-pose has not yet been definitely settled. The fertilizer that will produce the heaviest crop of wheat does not always produce the greatest amount of gluten.

Virgin soil, however, is the soil, when and dingy and exude colors of 10,000 bycultivated, that contains the essentials gone chops and toasted cheese entertain for producing a high percentage of this ments. The paintings crowd each other constituent, and anything that will tend on the dirty walls and have that pecul-

A great deal also depends upon the wheat. That the west is specially pear, this place is noted for its choice adapted by the character of the soil for morsels and is frequented by the swell wheat growing may be shown by a curious result of sowing foreign seeds there. The round varieties of wheat contain a less amount of gluten than the elongated, but when these same round seeds are sown in the soils of the west they gradually become elongated, increasing the amount of gluten as they change in shape. Flour made from wheat rich in gluten is never the whitest, but it has rather a creamy tint. The mistaken idea among many is that the whiter the flour is the better it must be. It may make the whitest bread, but it does not contain the largest percentage of gluten, which is the constituent of the wheat that goes to make muscle and strength. In regard to applying manure, however, says the authority quoted, barn-yard mauure, short and well rotted, is always of value in increasing the percentage of gluten. Commercial manure that are abounding with nitrogenous matter are good, but they should always be used along with superphosphate. The phosphoric acid in the latter tends to increase the amount of gluten in the wheat and to benefit the growth considerably in other ways. This combination months before, but the incident had tion should not be ignored, for it is very passed from her mind, when of an after-

Some Points About Pulled Woot. of this description of wool produced change. and manufactured in this country or of the fact that in the manufacture of certain goods the result attained by their use cannot be produced by any other kinds. Of pulled wools, it is said, stocks in the leading markets are at this time unusually light, and manufacturers this description on our own production, as our importations of them are very small, the majority of these coming in on the skins, in which condition their value is a secondary and not a primary consideration. Pullers, since the first of the year, have been kept unusually busy and report that they have had a smaller number of skins during the past year than for several previous years. As stated by the authority above quoted, formerly the major part of our pulled wool was produced in the east, but since sheep began to be slaughtered in the west instead of being shipped alive the industry has rapidly declined in the east, particularly in New York. It is further said that Armour and Swift each pull about 3,000 skins a day, and that Swift has increased the capacity of his factory so that hereafter the output will be about 5,000 skins instead of 3,- 000 as heretofore. One additional reason which may be given for the present scarcity of these wools in eastern markets is the increasing consumption in the middle states. Swift reports that about four-fifths of the wools pulled in his factory last year were taken by western manufacturers.

Maine and Her Mackerel. The advent of mackerel upon the Maine coast and into its countless little bays occasions great general excitement and a feeling of security against positive want the coming winter. The good are finding it difficult to obtain a supply.

According to Bradstreet's we are almost entirely dependent for wools of this description. The good people all hasten to salt down a barrel of fish to each family, and with pork and potatoes in the cellar they feel that they can in a measure prepare, like the oft quoted man in Scripture, to "eat, drink and be merry." In these Maine villages visited by the silvery tribe there is an odor of cooking mackerel emanat-ing from every cottage, and the summer visitor may reckon on getting all the fish, and more, that he wants. Too Clean to Be Good.

While laboring under the misapprehension that it was counterfeit, the cashier of a large store on Main street refused on Monday to receive a two dollar bill that had merely been disinfected by a judicious use of soapsuds and carbolic acid. The bill was clean, and therefore looked upon with suspicion Its genuineness was subsequently estab-lished by the Charter Oak bank exchanging it for another bill. Would it not be better if storekeepers and the public in general would refuse to receive bills which are so soiled as to suggest at sight the need of disinfection, and accept those that are fit to handle?—Hartford Courant.
