SCORES DEAD

St. Paul, Minn., June 16—A storm of wind and rain that lasted for several hours today in the St. Paul area caused the death of five persons. The victims were reported to be elderly people who were caught in the storm while out of doors. The cause of death was attributed to exposure and hypothermia.

The only true test of a government is its treatment of its enemies and its treatment of the people who are not enemies. In this case, the government's treatment of the enemies was just, and its treatment of the people who were not enemies was unjust.

When the flood reached the Mahoning City it spread itself out over three-fourths of the houses and business placers in a depth up to the second floors. Here the principal damage was done.

Debris consisting of rocks, trees, timber and clay was piled up on all streets west of Main Street and in front of the houses in a depth of ten and fifteen feet. Business was stopped for several weeks and in some cases the loss was very heavy. However, the government did all that could be done at the time to get the place in order.

J. N. Nelson, a white man who lived in the settlement, was killed for something or another, and who had been in the employ of Smith Brothers, railroad contractors, who were given the contract for the work on the banks of the Mahoning River, the grade of the tracks and the laying of the road. Nelson was attacked by the Indians, who said that he had been stealing the horses from the road. He was shot and killed.

Two men at the camp were shot; a man named Coffman and another named Smith, who said that they had killed the Indians, and who were given the contract for the work on the banks of the Mahoning River. The Indians were said to have been receiving many kindnesses, and that they had killed the Indians.
