Ex-Sheriff Cruce presented his delinquent tax list to the County Judge Monday for final adjustment. The list embraces 457 tax payers. Of this number 176 have moved out of the county since the assessments. Forty five of the delinquents are colored. The list usually ranges from 450 to 600. There is some talk of having the list published in both local papers. If such a thing were done, the public would be surprised to find some names on the list of those who do not pay their taxes and are proof against the sheriff's levy. There is no question but that the publication of the list one year would find it materially diminished in number the next. There are men on the list who should be excused from paying taxes; they are men who have met with misfortunes, have no means, are broken down in health and have helpless families depending upon them. Such should be excused. There is not much excuse however for hale, hearty fellows, failing or refusing to help bear a small portion of the necessary county expenses. Hereafter the poll tax will not exceed $1.50 as the property holder must pay on his property as well as his head to assist in county matters, the usually large list of delinquent poll tax payers should be diminished.

CRITTENDEN SPRINGS.

The Well Known and Popular Watering Place Passes into New Hands.

The Beginning of What Promises To Be The Most Successful Season in its History.

A visit to Crittenden Springs this week showed that the new manager and new proprietor mean to make the popular watering place more attractive, if possible, than ever. As is already known, this valuable property now belongs to Mr. S. M. Jenkins, of Henderson. He is a man of large means and metropolitan ideas. For years he has traveled over the South and West, and has seen much of the best histories of the country, especially those of "some of the well-known watering places. His ambition is to make Crittenden Springs the equal, if not the superior, of any in the country. With this end in view no means will be spared.

Mr. J. S. Smith, until recently a well-known traveling man, has been engaged as manager for the season of 1893, and he is now on the grounds "putting the house in order." The magnificent hotel with one hundred rooms, is being furnished up inside and out, and the beautiful grounds are being touched up with the skill of a landscape artist. Every convenience known to the modern hotel will add to the comfort and pleasure of those who are so fortunate to choose Crittenden for their outing this year. There are electric bells in every room, tasty bath rooms for hot or cold, fresh or sulphur water, bathtubs, a fine billiard hall with three superb tables, a handsome ten-pin alley, lawn-tennis ground. A splendid band has been engaged for the entire season; an admirable dancing hall is being arranged, cinque rooms are being prepared. The parlors are magnificently furnished, the bed-rooms are marvels of beauty and comfort. A wine room is one of the new features. A system of water-works is being put in, and high wind mills will force the water to every door in the building.

The culinary department of the huge establishment will be in the hands of skilled artisans, and in every appointment no pains and no means will be spared to make it reach as near perfection as possible.

The acres upon acres of woodlands with their great shade trees, merry rills, mossy banks, charming walks, lovely mountain views make the place one of the loveliest in the whole country. While the $60,000 or $70,000 spent, this has added to the beauty of the place, of the new management, one realizes that an era of unsurpassed popularity has at last dawned upon the famous springs, which in ante bellum days numbered its guests and friends by the hundreds. It is fortunate that the property has fallen into such good hands, and before many seasons, Crittenden will stand at the head of the watering places.

It will only be a matter of time when the P. M. & O. R. railroad is built, and then Mr. Jenkins has a fortune indeed, but with the energy and faith that always presages success he has gone to work to make the Springs superior to the necessity of a railroad. The natural advantages are with him, and the popularity already achieved, shows that he has practically won.

Upon the whole the future of Crittenden Springs never was brighter, and the advent of new and younger men into the enterprise, means that it will rapidly go to the front as a watering place. People who go to Crittenden this year will find every thing to their liking.

In addition to its unequalled waters, the land is rich in minerals, which fact has long ago been demonstrated. The advent of the railroad will awaken this wealth into life.

The legs are situated on each side of the breast bone, two on a side. The turkey is perfectly healthy and runs around with the brood.

nature has added the greatest bounty and it is mysteriously hidden in the wealth of health giving waters. The sulphur water has no superior, the hundreds who have tested it are witnesses to this fact. Then there are a half dozen of as fine chalybeate springs as there is in the country. There is indeed a mine of health and wealth in these waters, which nature has so kindly brewed for man. With all the natural advantages, it is not strange that Mr. Jenkins pins his faith to its greatness as a watering place, and is willing to spend his money making it more attractive than ever.

The road from the O. V. depot to the Springs is being put in better condition than ever before, the distance has been shortened, and the rough places in the road eliminated. The drive this season will have none of the inconveniences usually found. Mr. Jenkins has made arrangements for a prompt and efficient transfer service to and from the depot. A uniform porter will meet every train to take charge of and check baggage and look after the comfort of guests.

The good reputation of the place has been growing and spreading for the past few years, and the attendance each year has increased. Already the new management has every assurance that many people from Henderson, Owensboro, Evansville, Louisville, Paducah, Cairo and Memphis will spend the hot months at Crittenden Springs; already many rooms have been engaged.

After spending a couple of hours going through the house, and over the place, and observing the handiwork of the new management, one realizes that an era of unsurpassed popularity has at last dawned upon the famous springs, which in ante bellum days numbered its guests and friends by the hundreds. It is fortunate that the property has fallen into such good hands, and before many seasons, Crittenden will stand at the head of the watering places.

SOIL MOISTURE AND SOIL TILLAGE.

An Important Matter Made Plain With Illustrative Diagrams.

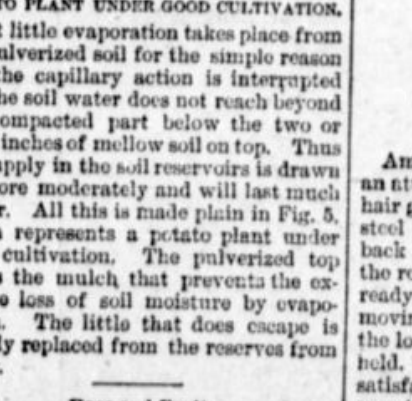

TILLAGE AND SOIL. With a good depth of reservoir on soils with porous subsoil, and consequently with a free movement of the soil water, down in winter and up in summer, and the economical use of soil moisture by the prevention of excessive evaporation, a continuous supply of moisture can be secured to the roots even in a dry season.

The upward movement of the soil water by capillary action to be free requires compact but porous soil. In freshly stirred soil the interstices are too large for such action, and here the upward movement comes to a stop. In explanation of the foregoing is here reproduced a communication from T. Gardner to Country Gentleman, in which he says:

I had a piece of tough soil, clay loam, which was to be planted to onions and potatoes. My man plowed it in the style, as shown in Fig. 1. Owing to the heavy spring rains all our soils worked badly during the early part of the season, and it was impossible to break up and fine them. After much work with disk and smoothing harrow the man got the surface of the piece in pretty good shape, but the tough soil was not broken, and hollow spaces were left between subsoil and top soil, as shown in Fig. 2.

I have seldom seen a piece of apparently well tilled soil that is quickly affected by dry weather as this. All during the season it became completely dried out in a few days of dry weather after every rain. The explanation is simple enough. The capillary action was largely interrupted at the surface of the subsoil, as may be seen in Fig. 2, and the surface soil received but little assistance from the soil water beneath. When the plowing is done, as shown in Fig. 3, and the soil compacted so that the surface soil rests closely and firmly upon the subsoil, the soil water movement is not interrupted. The moisture comes up into the surface soil, as shown in Fig. 4, and provides a continuous supply for the roots of our crops.

Evaporation at the surface, however, would pump up this moisture from below pretty fast, and during a prolonged drought perhaps exhaust the supply in the reservoir if capillary action is not interrupted a few inches below the surface by thorough pulverization of the upper crust. The fine loose soil over the compacted layer acts as a mulch. The water from below can pass through this mulch to the surface only in the form of vapor, and evaporation under cover in the cool and moist surroundings as found on the line between the compacted layer and the pulverized soil must be very slow.

POTATO PLANT UNDER GOOD CULTIVATION. But little evaporation takes place from the pulverized soil for the simple reason that the capillary action is interrupted and the soil water does not reach beyond the compacted part below the two or three inches of mellow soil on top. Thus the supply in the soil reservoirs is drawn on more moderately and will last much longer. All this is made plain in Fig. 5, which represents a potato plant under good cultivation. The pulverized top soil is the mulch that prevents the excessive loss of soil moisture by evaporation. The little that does escape is quickly replaced from the reserves from below.

Bees and Fruit. At the recent meeting of California beekeepers the much vexed question of bees and fruit came up for discussion. The ground was taken that bees will not puncture fruit, but will clear it up thoroughly when it is previously punctured by bumble bees. The question of hives was also considered, and preference was for a large hive for extracted honey, while a hive with a small broad chamber was desired for comb honey.

Orchard Grass For Pasture. Owing to its habit of starting anew as soon as cut down, almost without regard to weather or season of the year, if the ground is not frozen when thickly seeded, giving feed both early and late in the season. It will bear continuous feeding better than almost anything but blue grass, but it has one fault: if not cut down, the last late fall growth, when heavy, is liable to fall down upon the crown of the roots and smother itself out. Those who have it should look out that there is not much left standing on the field when winter comes in. It is also easily smothered by weeds when it first comes up, and if they are plenty they should be mown down until the grass gets above them.

Rhode Island's Abandoned Farms. According to a report from the commissioner of industrial statistics for Rhode Island, there are in that state 277 abandoned farms. Upon the majority of them, it is said, even the grass is not cut. In the localities of these deserted farms it appears that there is a regular drain upon them for mill help, which has been in good demand. Then, too, many of the farms are remote from railroads and good markets.

CAPONIZING TOOLS.

The Old Chinese Instruments Versus the Various Modern Ones. There are a number of different patterns of caponizing tools on the market. Instrument makers and others have endeavored to improve upon the old Chinese instruments. Samuel Cushman, poultry manager of the Rhode Island experiment station, who has made an extensive study of caponizing instruments of every description as well as practical tests, gives the preference to the best Chinese tools.

Chinese Instruments. brane lining the abdominal cavity, forceps to pick up and help tear the thin membrane covering the testicle, an elevator or spoonlike probe to draw the lower testicle into view, to assist in passing the hair over the glands, and to scoop out blood, feathers or particles that should be removed from the cavity, and a tube or cannula to hold and direct the hair into the testicle, by which the testicle is torn off. To save picking up so many different tools the knife and forceps are usually combined in one, also the spoon and hook.

The first cut will be understood by means of a diagram. A knife and forceps combined. D, whisker spreader. C, corset for fastening limbs, furnished with most sets, but not used at the station. F, hook for turning the thin skin of the testicle over the hair. E, spoon or elevator. F, cannula or tube, showing the hair pipe which is passed over the testicle projecting from the point and the part grasped by the fingers projecting from the square top or back, by which the tube is held. G, special form of spoon and hook. Mr. Cushman criticizes the Chinese tools in some particulars. He thinks the forceps have too much curve at the point. The jaws should be thin and narrow at the point and fit in rather perfectly and be about 5 inches in length from the blade. One should be able to catch with them the thin enter skin of the back of the head and stretch it quite a distance or tear it without their letting go. The excellence of this tool is important as anything connected with the set. The wholebone spreader Mr. Cushman pronounces far superior to all the wire spreaders seen and tried. If properly made, it stays in position until removed without being held. In the one shown in the cut the wholebone is in two pieces fastened together at one end. The sliding ring is used to increase or decrease the tension. In all the spreaders of this sort that he has seen, as they come from the makers the wholebone is so weak or lifelike that it is unsatisfactory.

The spoon in all sets on the market that he has seen is likewise defective to its purpose. Blades of the best form of Chinese caponizing spoon and hook may be seen at G in the first cut. The bowl should be widest near the tip and then taper to the handle. In all the spreaders of this sort that he has seen, as they come from the makers the wholebone is so weak or lifelike that it is unsatisfactory.

Among the many modern instruments an attempt to do away with the wholebone spreader has been made. A steel spring hook, the steel wire loop back within the tube. By pressing on the rod at the top the loop is pushed out ready to be placed in position. By removing the pressure the spring draws up the loop and the instrument is firmly held. It is a wire spreader of a style as satisfactory as any Mr. Cushman has ever tried. C is the separate hook, and D the knife furnished with the sets generally sold.

Sweet Corn. At the Utah station last season Early Marlhead and Cory were the most promising of the very early varieties of sweet corn. Landreth's Sugar and Old Colony were the most promising of the late varieties. Other varieties that did comparatively well were Amber Cream, Black Mexican, Egyptian, Everbearing, Livingston's, Evergreen, Moore's Early Concord, Meule's Mammoth, Maule's XX Sugar, Northern Pledge, Stabler's Early Triumph.
