AN OPEN LETTER.

January 1, 1897.

Mr. President:

I send you herewith a very feebly written note from the line of the river that flows through the city of Washington. It is the negro's way of saying "[redacted]."

I have heard several instances where the negroes have sent letters to their friends in the States purporting to be written by them. In every case the letters have been written in the negro's own way of saying it, and have been so sent by the negroes themselves.

I have also heard of several instances where the negroes have sent letters to their friends in the States purporting to be written by them. In every case the letters have been written in the negro's own way of saying it, and have been so sent by the negroes themselves.
