Hon. W. J. Stone.

Curt W. A. Stone at Nashville.

For many days in a row and in the middle of the afternoon he has been in front of the Union depot and the local adjutant of the forces of the enemy had stationed there for the purpose of preventing any of his friends from leaving the city to go to the battle field. The situation is now very critical, and the demand is for every man who can be spared. The local adjutant of the forces of the enemy has now issued an order that no man shall be permitted to leave the city.

Aunt Julia.

Aunt Julia, who has been in the hospital for the past two weeks, is now convalescing and is expected to be discharged from the hospital soon.

ASEMION IN A SALOON.

The story is told of a Saloon in a small town where the only other business was a blacksmith shop. The Saloon was run by an old man who had been a horseman in his younger days. He was a strict moralist and believed that the only way to keep a good name was to keep the town clean and respectable. One day, a young man came to the Saloon and asked for a drink. The old man refused, saying, "No, young man, this is a Christian town. We don't serve alcohol here."

The young man was taken aback by this and asked the old man why he wouldn't serve him. The old man replied, "Because I want this town to remain respectable. If I serve alcohol, I'll ruin the reputation of the town."

The young man was impressed by the old man's stance and left the Saloon, vowing to never visit it again. The old man then went into his blacksmith shop and began working on a new horse shoe. As he worked, he thought about the young man's visit and how he had learned an important lesson about the importance of maintaining a good name.

The old man continued to run the Saloon, and the town remained clean and respectable for many years. He was remembered as a great man who had helped to keep the town on the right path. And the story of the young man and the old man became a legend in the town, reminding everyone of the importance of doing the right thing.
