Twenty Years...

...when we were but a few little villages, the country was tiny, the people right in the county. A man's home was his castle, and the state line was a frontier. Few of us knew what it was to live in a town, and the only way to get there was by horseback or by boat.

Now, however, with the advent of the railroad and the automobile, we have a much larger world to explore. The county is now a metropolis, and the state line is a mere formality.
