Miles-Hale.

On Wednesday evening, Sept. 13, at the residence of the bride's father-Mr. W. S. Hale, of the Hebron neighborhood-Miss Annie Hale and Mr. Richard Miles were united in marriage, Rev. W. R. Gibbs officiating. The pleasant home of Mr. Hale was filled with friends of the two families, gathered to witness the happy union. A sumptuous suppe was served, and the occasion was a delightful one.

The bride is a handsome and charming young lady, held in high esteem by those who know her.

The groom is one of the rising young farmers of the Tolu neighborhood, he is a grandson of the late P. B. Barnett. He is popular with his many friends and acquaintances.

The PRESS hopes that nothing will mar the happiness of these esteemable young people.

A REAL TREASURE ISLAND SOME PECULIAR A

Romantic Spot of Unusual Interest Which Is Located Near Porto Rico.

THE HAUNT OF PIRATES.

An Ideal Spot for Freebooters to Hide Their Booty-Caves Galore, Intricate and Inaccessible

Some of the Caverns of La Mona in the Vicinity of Cape Caigo Present Still the Undoubted Traces of Pirates-Walls Are Graven With Sinister Designs-$120,000 in Coins and Jewels Uncarthed.

At the centre of the sea of the Antilles, at the middle of the passage which separates St Domingo from Porto Rico, there calses itself above the waves a steep rock, to which the ancient Spanish navigators gave the name of "La Mona," or "Monita," the Little Monkey. Among the sallors of the Antilles, La Mona is always called the Island of Pirates, and it is thought to conceal mysterious treasures.

It is an immense chalky block, seven kilometres long and four or five wide, rearing its summit, flat as a table, to thirty or forty metres above the sea. The waves, always agitated in these coasts, have shaped this block into a pedestal of pointed cliffs, and, except in two or three points, where narrow stretches of shore advance, the island is almost inaccessible. Ships are kept at a distance, as much by the violence of the waves as by a chain of rocks which surround it, and where alone open a few passages for small vessels.

At the southern point of the island an enormous rock seems miraculously suspended from the crest of a cliff. The suspended from the crest of a cliff. The sailors have named it "Caigo o no caigo," which means, "Shall I fall, or shall I not fall." In spite of its perilous position, the rock in equilibrium has resisted for many ages the attacks of storms and waves.

But one of the most curious particulars of this island, so strange from many points of view, is that its chalky mass is throughout pierced by immense.

mass is throughout pierced by immense caves, innumerable grottos, which ramify in all ways, and, having their en-trance under the face of the cliff, conduct by sinuous passages to the very summit of the plateau. The grottos, inhabited by bands of seabirds, were but lately in part obstructed by guano, which has been nearly all taken away. The adventurer intrepid chough to engage himself in this formidable struggle soon finds himself arrested by two very unexpected obstacles; in effect, among the tangles of plants are hidden swarms of immense wasps, which, at the least rustling, precipitate themselves on the intruder, and can by theinserves on the intruder, and can by their dangedous stings put his life in danger; again, if he escapes from these guardians of the jungle, he has to their dangerous stings put his life in dwarf cactus, which in many places stud the earth, and the pricks of which, without heing as dangerous as which, without being as dangerous as those of the wasp, are very painful, and cause a high fever. One can understand that this rocky isle, so well defended by the forces of nature, may have offered a refuge to the daring fillbusters, who have been during many centuries the terror of the Antilles. After having passed by secret passages in the belt of rocks, they sheltered their vessels in some in tricacy of the cliff and established themselves in these grottos which formed impregnable natural fortresses.

There no one could reach them, and supposing that a daring assailant had succeeded in forcing an entrance to their haunt, the bandits would fly through the detours of the inextricable labyrinth and would gain the impenetrable thicket of the upper plateau, where it would be impossible to track

Some of these caverns in the vicinity of Cape Caigo present still the un-doubted traces of pirates. One of them called Cueva Negra—Black Cave -from the thick coat of soot which covers its vault, is a vast chamber, around which spreads a network of other chambers and passages. The walls of this chamber are still craven with sinister designs, representing gallows supporting rows of bodies and lows supporting rows of bodies and above which are inscribed the names of the victims, names where are found represented all the nations among which these rascals recruited their band, and which are doubtless those of traitors or rebels executed by their companions, unless they were the un-fortunate captives sacrificed by these wretches. Some cannon balls, still en-crusted in the walls of the cliff, near the entrance, also prove that the place was besieged, without doubt, by some war vessel sent in pursuit of the

These grottos did not serve as places These grottos did not serve as places of refuge merely; the pirates used them as storehouses and kept in them the products of their captures. So, when at the close of the last century, France and England had succeeded in destroying this breed, it was thought that the identity was contain some of the imisland must contain some of the im-mense treasures which the pirates had hidden there during many years. Searches were made, but the extent of the caverns to be gone over was so great that no result was obtained. However, about forty years ago, an American, guided, it appears, by a mysterious document, landed on the learny with a troop of perges from island with a troop of negroes from San Domingo and succeeded in unthis result, an American company was formed in 1880 and undertook to search methodically while taking up the thick bed of guano deposited by the seabirds on the floor of the grottoes; but out-side the precious guano no treasure

When native Samoans are not at war they seem to foreigners to have a very easy and agreeable life. There is never very much to do, and what there is is not arduous or tiring. The old women, for instance, braid mats or sit upon the rocks and beat and strip the bark for making tapa, the native cloth. The brewing and perfuming of cocoanut oil is another industry in which women play a prominent part. The men spend much of their time in making fishing lets and tackle.

Philippine Squirrel Another Odd Cres-Prized Alligator.

One freak beast which will excite one freak beast which will excite curiosity in our zoological gardens is the tamarau, a dwarf buffalo found in the forests of Mindoro of the Philippine group. It is a stunted form of the Old World buffalo, not of the American bison. It sometimes occurs buffalor in the nonvinting it remede high up in the mountains. It tunnels pathways through the thick bamboo undergrowth covering the mountain sides above 6,000 feet. Hunters must go upon hands and knees to follow these trails. The aborigines never hunt this little beast, being deadly

The midget Philippine squirrel is another odd creature. It is about the size of a mouse, has legs longer in proportion than those of the ordinary squirrel, large eyes and rounded ears. A brown rat, gray underneath ar large brown rat, gray underneath and with a squirrel-like head and eyes, but black, cord-like tall, is of still greater interest from an evolutionary point of view. It is discovered to be the last link long needed to complete the chain of relationship between the true rat and the water rats. A wild pig, dignified by the name of "Sus celebensis Philippinesis." is found throughout the whole Philippine group. It is exceedingly exclusive during the day, when it hides in the forests, but sailles gaily forth during the night into the gally forth during the night into the native maize and rice fields, where it

The Philippines will also contribute a giant fruit-eating bat. All Ameria giant fruit-eating bat. All American bats, of course, subsist entirely upon insects, and are provided with sharp teeth with which to nip them. The fruit-eating bat of these islands is larger than a rat, has a long head and blunt teeth. It makes nightly inroads upon the banana plantations and other fruit preserves. During the day it sleeps handing head downward from a preserves. During the day it

In Bataan, of the Philippine group, is found a chevretain, or a "mouse deer," a tiny little pigmy as cunning as a fox, and which when snared feigns death until freed, when it leaps up like lightning flash and takes to the forest leaving the inexperienced trapper in great surprise. The Philippines also contain civets, wildcats, porcupines lizards, snakes and alligators. The "chacon," one variety of alligator, is prized by the natives as affording immunity against earthquake shock.
