SOLDIER LIFE

On an Island in the Harbor of New York.

FT. COLUMBUS, N. Y. H. }
February 13, 1901. }

EDITOR PRESS: Quite a little while has elapsed since the writer has sent a few columns to your paper, and at that time he was in Porto Rico, and wishing for a change to get back to the United States again. The change was made. What so many of the blue coated, or rather brown coated boys were longing for many a day, they had obtained. They were sent from the tropics, from Porto Rico, where quite a few lost their hearts to the dark-eyed senoritas, to their home shores, the country they loved so well. And better than that, they took station near the most cosmopolitan town of the globe, New York City.

Governor's Island, their station, is situated about one mile from New York city, and is one of the many islands in the harbor. From its shore one can overlook the three large cities, New York, Brooklyn (the city of churches), and Jersey City. As an island it is not more than any other island, in the harbor. But the importance of it from a military standpoint of view is clear. It commands the immediate entrance to the North and East rivers, which two rivers surround New York city. The island is divided into three parts: Headquarters, Department of the East, New York Arsenal and Fort Columbus. A casual visitor coming to the island would call this ridiculous. He would say I can see nothing more than an island, covered with houses and barracks. But a soldier can see the difference before he is 5 minutes on the place. The most conspicuous building on it is Castle William, erected in 1811, and now used as a military prison. It is situated on the southwestern corner and was formerly one of its foremost defenses. All that remains of its former formidable character are a few guns on the ramparts, which are never fired. There are about 200 prisoners confined there now, who are in charge of a prison officer and two prison overseers (both non-commissioned officers) and who work daily about the island, coaling the government ferry boats, policing the island, etc., under charge of the guard of Fort Columbus. This Fort is now garrisoned by three companies of the 11th Infantry.

The island itself is under command of Maj. General John R. Brooke, former Governor-General of Cuba. How long the three companies will remain here, is a question which is asked by many a soldier but which only the power that—the War Department—can answer. Good things don't last long, and life here is one of those good things.

The biggest attraction for a soldier around here is New York city which can be reached by a government ferry boat in seven minutes. From the island can be seen the tall sky-scrapers towering high in the air. The boat lands at the old battery park, and the soldier is ready to start on his way up town to take in the attractions. But it puzzles him considerably where to go. The theatres are numerous and he has to study the programs until he has chosen one play that attracts him and to that theater he goes.

Afternoon strolls are of rare occurrence. But when it does happen the stroll is delightful. What in the noise of the elevated railroads, the pushing and shoving of the crowds in the streets, everything is new to the men who have been banished for two years in the tropics. Confused becomes his head when he is obliged to cross the street at the crossings of 5 or 6 street cars, and anxiously he looks forward, sideward and backward to avoid the rapidly coming cars. The eyes and head become tired from the noise and bustle, and he seeks a place of rest and quiet. There is only one such place in this great town, where there is to be had not only quiet, but where one can find also all the attractions of nature. And this is the central park. This park is one of the greatest of its kind, not only in size, but also in its exhibitions. Small forests change with lagoons, ponds, bridges and the greatest floral displays imaginable. The greatest of its attractions is the Zoo of the park. Almost every animal in Zoology of nature is represented; but the greatest attraction of it for visitors is the house containing the monkeys.

But the afternoon soon draws to a close and the bugle at the post does not wait for a tardy man. So we take the elevated road to the battery and along the house tops we whirl along and in a short time reach our destination. A short trip across the river and we are at home again.

There are several other places to visit from here which can be done on certain days. The government steamer Gen. Meigs goes on certain days to West Point up the Hudson, to Davids Island, Sandy Hook, that formidable Watch island, at the entrance of the harbor and most of the outlying islands, and every trip is delightful.

The view across the river now is gloomy. The water is covered with floating ice, going backward and forward with the tide and the navigation in the harbor is greatly hampered by it. But that will last only a short time longer, and with the spring we will be able to again make nice trips unless our Commander-in-Chief says "No; your next trip will be to the Philippines."

OLLIE CRIDER

Bound Over to Await the Action of The Grand Jury.

The examining trial of Ollie Crider, charged with maliciously shooting and wounding William Graves on Dec. 10, was opened Monday with county Judge Rochester on the bench. The courtroom was full of people anxious to hear the testimony in the case. Both sides promptly announced ready, and with little delay the witnesses for the Commonwealth were called. Mr. Graves was the first witness called. He told of the trouble and the shooting, stating that he did all that he could to avoid the dispute or any trouble. The other Commonwealth witnesses introduced were James Wilborn, Dr. Frazer, Ed Vaughn, J. E. Postlethwaite, Tom Wilborn, H. Koltinsky and Frank Loyd.

The defense rested without introducing any witnesses. Tuesday morning when court convened the argument commenced and was finished in the afternoon, when Judge Rochester rendered his decision. Mr. Crider was held over to await the action of the grand jury, under the present bond of $3,000.

Wm. Graves testified—
"That he came to Marion with a load of corn on day of trouble. During morning he met Crider on street. Left his team at Koltinsky's store in afternoon went there to get a jug of molasses. Crider was standing in front of the store and as Graves came out of the door grabbed him by lapel of coat and told him he wanted to talk to him. Graves told him he wanted to have no trouble, therefore for Crider to leave him alone. Crider cursed him. Bitter words were passed. Crider kicked Graves and drew a revolver. Graves threw the jug at Crider but missed him, and Crider shot him. Crider then snapped the pistol twice, but it failed to fire. At this time Marshal Loyd arrested Crider and Graves was carried to the office of the doctor."

LATEST CHINESE NOTE.

New Turn in the Peace Negotiations Has Caused a Diplomatic Earthquake in Peking.

CHINA IS GETTING HER BACK UP AGAIN.

A Brief and Almost Insulting Note From the Court Has Arrived Flatly Refusing Any Further Executions than the Two Previously Decreed.

New York, Feb. 16.—A dispatch to the Herald from Peking says:

A new turn in the peace negotiations has caused a diplomatic earthquake among the ministers. A brief and almost insulting note from the court has arrived flatly refusing any further executions than the two previously decreed. Yu Hain, governor of Shan Si province, will be decapitated and Prince Chwang will be allowed to commit suicide. The note adds that possibly Chao Shu Chiao, formerly minister of justice, may be included among those to suffer death, but the court reserves its decision in this case. It is also bluntly stated that no further initiative will be permitted to Li Hung Chang and Prince Ching, who are berated for having failed to protect vigorously against the demand of the ministers for six executions, three posthumous and three documentary. The court calls this demand preposterous and impossible to meet, and says that it was not contemplated when the general agreement was signed. The imperial government says, in short, that the powers ask outrageously too much and cannot be satisfied.

A Twenty-Five-Dollar Family.

A strong sense of the fitness of things must have possessed a colored woman who recently applied for the place of cook in a Washington household. The home was exceptionally well supplied with rich furniture and bric-a-brac, and evidently the woman thought her work should be in keeping with this elegance.

"What is your name?" asked the family. "Evangeline, thank you," came in reply from the dusky applicant.

"Evangeline, then, tell me, are you a good cook?"

"It's just like this: You see, I can do ten dollars' cooking, $15 cooking, $20 cooking; but—"

There was an undue emphasis on the "but," and Evangeline glanced admiringly about the house.

"It seems to me," she went on, finally, "you folks wouldn't be satisfied with any other than my $25 kind."

The family was taken aback, but managed to recover itself in time to say it might get along with about seventeen-dollar-and-thirty-five cents cooking for a few months, at any rate.—Washington Star.

World to End This Year.

This is the recent decision of one of the prominent societies of the sort, but the exact day has not yet been fixed upon, and while there are very few people who believe this prediction, there are thousands of others who not only believe, but know that Hostetter's Stomach Bitters is the best medicine to cure dyspepsia, indigestion, constipation, biliousness or liver and kidney troubles. A few trials will certainly convince you of its value.

Greatest in the World.

Within five years Cascares have reached the largest sale of any liver or bowe medicine in the world, simply because they cure. They have great merit as the sale of over six million boxes a year proves. No matter what ail you, start using Cascares today and if you are not benefited and in every fair trial you can have your money back for the asking. There is no waste. They are put up in tablet form and every tablet is stamped "C. C. C." They don't cost much—10c, 25c and 50c a box and a 50c box will furnish a whole month's treatment for the worst case. Cascares are the best and cheapest liver and bowe regulator in the world.

Sore Hands

Red, Rough Hands, Itching, Burning Palms, and Painful Finger Ends.

One Night Treatment

Soak the hands on retiring in a strong, hot, creamy lather of CUTICURA SOAP. Dry, and anoint freely with CUTICURA, the great skin cure and purest of emollients. Wear, during the night, old, loose kid gloves, with the finger ends cut off and air holes cut in the palms. For red, rough, chapped hands, dry, fissured, itching, feverish palms, with shapeless nails and painful finger ends, this treatment is simply wonderful, and points to a speedy cure of the most distressing cases when physicians and all else fail.

Cured by Cuticura

I WAS troubled with hands so sore that when I put them in water the pain would near set me crazy, the skin would peel off, and the flesh would get hard and break, then the blood would flow from at least fifty places on each hand. Words never can tell the suffering I endured for three years.

I tried at least eight doctors, but my hands were worse than when I commenced doctoring. I tried every old Gossamer remedy that was ever thought of without one cent's worth of good and could not even get relief.

I would feel so badly mornings when I got up, to think that I had to go to work and stand pain for eight or nine hours, that I often felt like giving up my job, which was in the bottling works of Mr. E. L. Kerns, the leading bottler of Trenton, N. J., who will vouch for the truth of my sufferings.

Before I could start to work, I would have to wrap each finger on both hands, and these were gloves, which I hated to do, for when I came to remove them off, it would take two hours and the flesh would break and bleed. Some of my friends who had seen my hands would say, "If they had such hands they would have them amputated"; others would say, "they would never work," and more would turn away in disgust. But thanks to Cuticura, the greatest of skin cures, it ended all my sufferings.

Just to think, after doctoring three years, and spending dollar after dollar during that time, Cuticura cured me. It has now been two years since I used it and I do not know what sore hands are. I never lost a day's work while I was using it or since, and I have been working at the same business, and in acids, etc.

Grave, earnest, dignified, unspoiled, sincere.
He lived above the fetid atmosphere
Of puny selfishness and shriveled pride,
In unspanned space sublimely wise and wide,
Content to love our land as patriots should
And serve his country for that country's good.
No sycophant nor oily flatterer he,
But from all petty shams and shallows free
He stood erect in greatness and in grace,
Looked every evil squarely in the face,
Denounced all tricksters, courtiers, knaves,
Scorning alike the tyrant and his slaves;
Foresaw all dangers, far-off futures scanned,
For perils others saw not keenly planned,
Beheld grim battles looming up ahead,
Yet viewed them calmly, coolly, without dread—
A man equipped in word and ready deed
God's hosts of Freedom in strong love to lead
Through battle smoke, through baptisms of flame,
With steadfast courage naught could turn nor tame;
A hero girded Freedom's fight to win
And triumph over tyranny and sin.
That god sword sheathed, his eagle vision saw
A land in peace, subordinate to law,
Into that lasting sunlit atmosphere
And guided it with instinct clean and clear
Which blessed its people with contentment's calms
'Neath northern pines and plummy southern palms.
Shaper of destinies, he challenged fate,
Made his loved country prosperous and great,
Till rising clear from clouded fields of Mars
Flashed forth resplendent all its bannered stars.
Not since the world through space its course has run,
Since glory dawned and mighty deeds were done,
Has man excelled our peerless Washington.

AN AMERICAN BEAUTY.

A Story for Washington's Birthday.
By T. C. HARBAUGH.

"WHAT'S going to happen now, Mabel?"
Jack Conroy, as he spoke, looked at the fair girl who had just come downstairs with a folded American flag on her arm and a lustrous light in her deep brown eyes.
"Don't you know, Jack? Tomorrow is the twenty-second, and I am nothing if not patriotic."
"Pshaw! always keeping tab on our anniversaries. I guess you don't let any of them slip by you."
"Why should we? This is a glorious country, and—"
"The land of the free and the home of the brave," broke in the handsome fellow in his brown riding suit and broad-brimmed hat, patterned a little after cowboy style. "I suppose you are going to brush the old thing up and hang it out to-morrow, and bring some of the greasers, who are not patriotic, down upon you?"
"I shall certainly let the breeze of the Brazos kiss the folds of 'Old Glory,' and I don't think the greasers, as you call them, will molest it."
"We'll see," laughed Conroy; "but, seriously, Mabel, I'd advise you to take it down if you see them coming from town to-morrow a little earlier. That's a great flag, of course, the fairest and dearest banner in the world, to our way of thinking."
"Glad I am, on behalf of the flag, for your compliment, the first I have heard you pass this year, I believe," and Mabel Brewster, known to many as the Rose of the Brazos, unfolded the beautiful banner, hanging it gracefully over the back of a chair in a manner that disclosed its white stars in their field of soft azure.
"Thanks," was the reply; "but, really, I must be going. Am sorry I can't be with you to-morrow to help you celebrate the day."
"You won't be here, then?"
"I think not. I shall have to pass the day on the range; but, if I can, why, I'll come down toward evening. You'll have to celebrate alone unless you can induce some of the greasers to assist you."
A few moments later Jack was riding toward the west, watched by the young girl, who stood in the doorway of the home near the river, and who now and then replied to the wave of his hand with a similar wave of the flag.
"Jack's patriotic, of course," she said, half aloud to herself; "but he doesn't take to anniversaries like some other people. He thinks them a little stale. But let some one insult this flag in his presence, and there will have to be an instant apology or a fight!"
Early the following morning Mabel, who was alone, with the exception of her widowed mother, who, being an invalid, was seated in an armchair at the window, carried the flag outdoors and hoisted it at the tip of the slender pole which had been planted in front of the Texas home for that purpose.
It was Washington's birthday, and as she stepped back and saw the winds shake out the starry folds of our nation's banner, Mabel thought of her ancestor, who had followed that same flag on famous fields under the eye of the great Washington himself. Never before had it looked so beautiful to her. As it rose and fell in the breeze it seemed rebranded with new lustre; its stars got a brighter whiteness and the crimson of the glorious stripes grew deeper beside their sisters in white.

Having hoisted the flag, which her mother could see from her seat at the window, the fair girl reentered the house and went about her duties.
"Is Jack coming back?" asked the old lady, watching Mabel's quick movements.
"I think not; at least he said he feared we would have to keep the day alone."

"The flag still floated."

THE FLAG STILL FLOATED.

answered Mabel, blushing a little. "You know, mother, he would have quite a ride from the range."
"Yes, but Jack thinks a good deal of you, child, and—"
"O, we'll see enough of each other before long," interrupted Mabel, as the blush grew deeper on her healthy cheeks.
"And I shall be happier than ever, then," and the speaker turned away, and, looking from the house out over the beautiful stretch of country in sight, recalled the days of her young maidenhood when she was wooed and won by one who had given his life for the flag of our common country.
The day passed almost uneventfully for the two women in the Brazos home. Now and then Mabel saw a horseman passing along the road which, running near the house, led to the little town a few miles away. Every once in a while some of the riders would tip their hats to the flag, but, for the most part, the men passed without demonstration.
"Mexicans, some of Jack's greasers," the girl would murmur when she saw the latter.
Towards evening the young girl was startled by a series of wild shouts that drew her instantly to the window and thence to the door, in which she stood looking and listening.
A party of horsemen had turned from the road and were coming toward the house.
They rode the sturdy Mexican pony, and it did not take Mabel long to identify them. "We are going to have some callers," she said, calmly, turning back into the house. The revelers are coming back from Gulch City and have turned from the road.
"Mexicans, child?"
"Some of Jack's greasers," smiled Mabel Brewster. "Don't you hear their outlandish cries?"
"They may have designs against the flag,"
Instantly the face of the young girl reddened. She knew what the half-drunk greaser is capable of doing when he has spent a mad day in a frontier town, and before going again to the door she looked toward a corner of the room where she saw something that seemed to please her.
Then she opened the door.
By this time the hilarious horde had drawn rain in front of the house, and the foremost was throwing jibes at the banner that floated grandly in the winds.
Mabel faced the band with a smile on her face.
In an instant arose the demand, accompanied by harsh words, for the lowering of the flag.
"Is that your mission?" answered Mabel. "Do you think for a moment that a Brewster will haul down the flag of Washington? I hoisted it with these hands, and they will never lower it to anyone."
"The senorita must not insult Mexicans," came the flashing response.

AN AMERICAN BEAUTY.

manner that disclosed its white stars in their field of soft azure.
"Thanks," was the reply; "but, really, I must be going. Am sorry I can't be with you to-morrow to help you celebrate the day."
"You won't be here, then?"
"I think not. I shall have to pass the day on the range; but, if I can, why, I'll come down toward evening. You'll have to celebrate alone unless you can induce some of the greasers to assist you."
A few moments later Jack was riding toward the west, watched by the young girl, who stood in the doorway of the home near the river, and who now and then replied to the wave of his hand with a similar wave of the flag.
"Jack's patriotic, of course," she said, half aloud to herself; "but he doesn't take to anniversaries like some other people. He thinks them a little stale. But let some one insult this flag in his presence, and there will have to be an instant apology or a fight!"
Early the following morning Mabel, who was alone, with the exception of her widowed mother, who, being an invalid, was seated in an armchair at the window, carried the flag outdoors and hoisted it at the tip of the slender pole which had been planted in front of the Texas home for that purpose.
It was Washington's birthday, and as she stepped back and saw the winds shake out the starry folds of our nation's banner, Mabel thought of her ancestor, who had followed that same flag on famous fields

"And Mexicans, if they are gentlemen, will not insist on pulling down the emblem of a sister republic."
A loud, derisive laugh greeted these words and told Mabel that she had wasted her effort on deaf ears.
"Bring it down, senorita, and we will tie it at our horses' heels and—"
"You will do nothing of the kind," interrupted the girl. "That flag floats to-day in honor of the great man who gave it as his legacy to this country."
"Down! down! down!" screamed the half-drunk mob as they urged their horses nearer to the doorstep.
Suddenly Mabel disappeared, but for a moment only.
In another instant her graceful figure reappeared in the doorway and the Mexicans saw that her white hands gripped the stock of a Winchester.
There was a brighter, almost fierce, light in the young girl's eyes as she stood defiantly in the doorway, looking calmly at the group before her.
"Senorita no shoot!" laughed the bearded leader of the greaser mob.
"A hand laid on the flag-ropes will answer that question!" was the instant rejoinder. "I thought better of you, Capt. Bustamente!"
The Mexican, whom Mabel knew by sight, grinned under his sombrero, and then glanced at his companions, who seemed to wonder if he would let an American girl cow him.
All at once Capt. Bustamente sprang from the middle and took a step toward the flag-pole.
The vile liquor of the frontier had fired his blood, and he was more than half dead as the cries of his set urged him on.
"Halt!" rang out clear and sharp as the Winchester struck Mabel Brewster's shoulder and instantly covered the Mexican chief.
"The hands that raised the flag of Washington will defend it to the bitter end!"
Capt. Bustamente bit his lips, but did not stop; he seemed bent on his own destruction. Suddenly, like a lion, he sprang at the flagpole, and, as his hand went up, the weapon spoke. Shot through the shoulder, for Mabel, an adept with the Winchester, did not want the worthless greaser's life—he recoiled and staggered back to his men, who at once set up cries of vengeance.
"Take your leader away and leave the flag where it is!" sternly commanded Mabel. "The next man who approaches it will forfeit his life!"
The very mien of the beautiful young girl checked the mob. They looked from her at one another, and strong arms drew Capt. Bustamente up into his saddle.
For a moment, while Mabel faced them, they looked into her face, then with a half cheer for her courage, they gave their steeds the cruel spur and she saw them vanish.
"Only a little Benito Bustamente's blood, mother, but the flag of Washington still kisses the breeze!" said Mabel, as she turned back into the house. This has been the most exciting Twenty-second we have ever had."

"And Jack will be prouder of you than ever!" was the answer, and Mrs. Brewster, folding her daughter to her heart, thanked God that the blood of her ancestors had not run out.

HELD IN HIGH HONOR.

Hundreds of Towns and Counties Named After George Washington.

NO MAN was ever honored so much in having states, cities, counties, towns, islands, and various other things named after him as Washington has been. Counties in 29 states are known as "Washington," and 166 places to which mail is addressed are named in his honor. There is generally at least one "Washington" in every state, and there are Washingtonville, Washington Plains, Washington Courthouse and various other derivatives of the same name. Statistics are obtained not easily in regard to the number of streets named after the Father of His Country, but there is not a town of any size which does not have a Washington street or Washington avenue. There are numberless Washington parks. By states, in the naming of counties and towns, Washington has been honored as follows:

AWAITING THE REMAINS.

Karloitz, Austria-Hungary, in Mourning Garb for Former King Milan.

THE SEARCH FOR THE BURIAL VAULT.

When Found the Remains of Milan's Great Grandmother, Princess Ljubica Obrenovitch, were Found to Be in a Remarkable State of Preservation, the Features Being Quite Recognizable.

Karloitz, Austria-Hungary, Feb. 16.—Large crowds assembled at the railroad station here awaiting the arrival of the remains of former King Milan of Serbia. Funeral arches draped with black and flying mourning flags were erected at the entrance of the town, the principal square and elsewhere. Many houses were draped and the patriarchal palace was profusely decorated with emblems of mourning.
A special train was in readiness at the frontier town of Semlin, to bring any guests of Serbia desirous of attending; but it is understood the authorities at Belgrade were placing difficulties in their way.
Great trouble was experienced in carrying out King Milan's wish to be buried by the side of his great grandmother, Ljubica Obrenovitch, wife of Milos, founder of the dynasty. The whereabouts of the vault could not be located, until a certain centurion was discovered who has attended the funeral of the princess. When the vault was opened they found that the wooden coffin has fallen apart and that the corpse was exposed. It was in a most remarkable state of preservation. The features were quite recognizable, and the pearl ornaments and silk robes of the princess were intact.

If the saloon keepers of Kansas will bend the supple knee to sister Nation, she will smite 'em on that joint!

Mrs. Nation's plan of operation is simply a phase of mob law, and that plan of dealing out equity is a dangerous thing for society, even if called into use for destroying a public enemy.

Even the Louisville Post embellishes some three or four of its columns with the Press's news, kindly intimating that it's correspondent is indebted to us for some of the valuable information in the article.

If we have to keep raming it down Cuba's throat that she owes us a debt of everlasting gratitude a disinterested party might come to believe that we contracted that debt for the sole purpose of collecting it.

A foreign dispatch says China positively refuses to chop off the head of any more of her high-muck-a-mucks to satisfy the demands of the Powers. She probably does not appreciate the settling of a big debt with small change.

Secretary Gage is a smart man. He recently placed a small tax on some $300,000 worth of Russian sugar imported into this country, and Russia immediately retaliated by slapping on a 30 per cent. additional tax on some $10,000,000 worth of American machinery imported into her domains. Our sapient Secretary has certainly "caught a Tartar"—or rather the Tartar has caught him.

Our mining news is attracting widespread attention and is bringing letters of inquiry from every point of the compass. These letters are not from "soldiers of fortune" either, but men who have capital to invest, in mining enterprises—men who have by foresight and business acumen established themselves in the commercial world. An influx of this element has begun, and this it is that will add new life and metropolitan activity to the locality.

We insist that the business men of Marion should make an organized effort to build up the town. To rest upon the oar and drift with the current is a passive manner of progress that long since went out of fashion, and those who persist in it will some day wake up to the fact that the boat has gone too far down stream to make a landing. Shall we make Marion equal to the occasion, or let the "occasion" slide by to be utilized by some other locality?

NEWS NOTES.

Terrific storms on the Atlantic coast are reported.

A man identified by young Cudahy as one of his abductors is under arrest in Omaha.

Congress appropriated $5,000,000 to the World's Fair to be held in St. Louis in 1903.

On recommendation of Congressman Allen, free mail delivery will be established in Union city.

Mrs. Elise Arnold was murderously assaulted by a negro at Dyersburg, Tenn. The negro was lynched.

The greatest strike of silk workers in the history of the country will probably be inaugurated at Paterson, N. J.

Mrs. Nation is in jail at Topeka for refusing to give a bond of $2,000 to keep the peace.

The American forces in China will not be allowed to join the Germans in an expedition against the Chinese.

It is stated that President McKinley will call Congress in extra session about April 1, and ask an increase in the army to 150,000.

The Navajo Indians are leaving their reservation and have taken possession of a strip of land fifty miles wide and two hundred miles long.

Mrs. Nation was put on trial for smashing saloons at Topeka, and her attorneys agreed that he has religious and legal warrant for abating nuisances: The influence of her example is spreading throughout the country.

A gang of Nationites stormed a saloon at Millwood, Kansas, and murdered the saloon keeper's wife. The saloon was attacked by armed men and women and the poor woman was standing in an inner door when one of the cowardly Nationites took deliberate aim and shot her in the head. Mrs. Nation and her followers are of the same class as a mob formed to lynch a man, and unless they are checked in their reckless career Kansas will be the scene of rioting and bloodshed. These Nationites must certainly be actuated by good principles if they resort to murder in order to rid the country of saloons.

The Democrats of Webster county in a primary election endorsed Mr. Porter for State Senator. He received more votes than both of his opponents. As he is competent and worthy, and comes backed by the united Democracy of his home county, there will evidently not be a dissenting voice to his nomination in the district.

TO THE DEMOCRATS OF CRITTENDEN AND LIVINGSTON COUNTIES: I take this method of announcing my candidacy to represent you in the next General Assembly of Kentucky. I will appreciate your support and if nominated promise an honest and earnest endeavor to win my election. If elected, I promise an honest and earnest endeavor to make you a faithful and efficient servant.

Sincerely yours,
P. C. STEPHENS.

P. C. Stephens.

Mr. P. C. Stephens briefly announces his candidacy for the Democratic nomination for Representative. He is one of the best known citizens of the county. For years he has been prominent in local politics, and one of the most active, untiring workers in the Democratic party. He has been as true and faithful to the tenets of his party as the needle to the pole, and he has stood by the organization "without variableness or shadow of turning." Mr. Stephens is a man of fine common sense, is well read and of mature judgment. He is worthy of the trust to which he aspires and would unquestionably make the district an able and faithful representative.

FEBRUARY TWENTY-SECOND

OW swift the years,
th' eventful years!
What heaps of dust on earth while treasures! Life's daily din is in our ears,
The tramp of toil, the song of pleasure.

And yet, with all the rust that lies
Upon the shrines of ancient glory,
There comes a day when thoughtful eyes
Re-read the old, inspiring story.

Of him who rose up in his might,
Sere and loyal, strong and tender,
Of country, liberty and right,
True advocate and brave defender.

O valley snows stained by their blood,
O laureled heights they died in winning—
Vanguard of freedom's brotherhood,
We build to-day from thy beginning.

O flag that Cambridge winds first knew,
What patriot prayers went out to bless
Thee! Star after star shines in thy blue,
And suns of every zone caress thee!

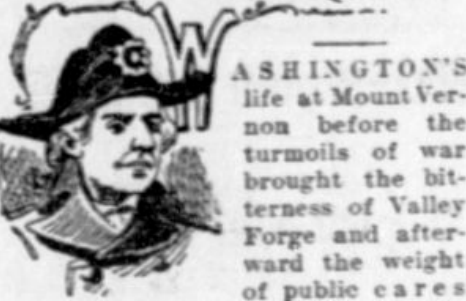

The flag, the land of Washington—
Bonds clasped anew that strife had broken—
The loyal heart its way hath won
By many a sacred sign and token.

God hold us true, as thou wert true,
To justice and its high endeavor,
May we remember "There are we"
To-day, to-morrow, and forever!

—E. C. Tompkins, in Youth's Companion.

OUR WASHINGTON.

"FIRST IN WAR, FIRST IN PEACE, FIRST IN THE HEARTS OF HIS COUNTRYMEN."

WASHINGTON'S life at Mount Vernon before the turmoils of war brought the bitterness of Valley Forge and afterward the weight of public cares presents a pleasant picture of the Virginia country gentleman. And yet, says the Chicago Inter Ocean, there were not lacking, even in the ornaments of the house, indications of the heroic mold in which its master was cast. When Washington first settled with his wife at Mount Vernon he ordered from Europe the busts of Alexander the Great, Charles XII. of Sweden, Julius Caesar, Frederick of Prussia, Marlborough and Prince Eugene, and in addition asked for statuettes of "two wild beasts." First, his admiration for the great soldier and statesman; next, the reckless but brilliant military adventurer, and last the exciting chase.

Washington was married at 27. Already he was one of the foremost men of the country. "For him the myrtle and ivy were entwined with the laurel, and fame was sweetened by youth. He was righteously ready to draw from life all the good things which fate and fortune, then smiling upon him, could offer, and he took his pleasures frankly and freely, with an honest heart. One loves to picture that gallant, generous, youthful figure, brilliant in color and manly in form, riding gayly on from one little colonial town to another, feasting, dancing, courting and making merry."

WASHINGTON AT FORTY-FIVE.
(Portrait by Peale.)

his stepchildren, all displayed a love of simplicity, but with a constant insistence that all should be of the best.

Washington's active life, as well as his pleasures, was largely out of doors. He understood every branch of farming; he rose early, worked steadily, gave everything his personal supervision, kept his own accounts with wonderful exactness, and he made money. He farmed, as he fought and governed, better than anybody else. At that time he appeared an evenly-balanced, square and solid planter.

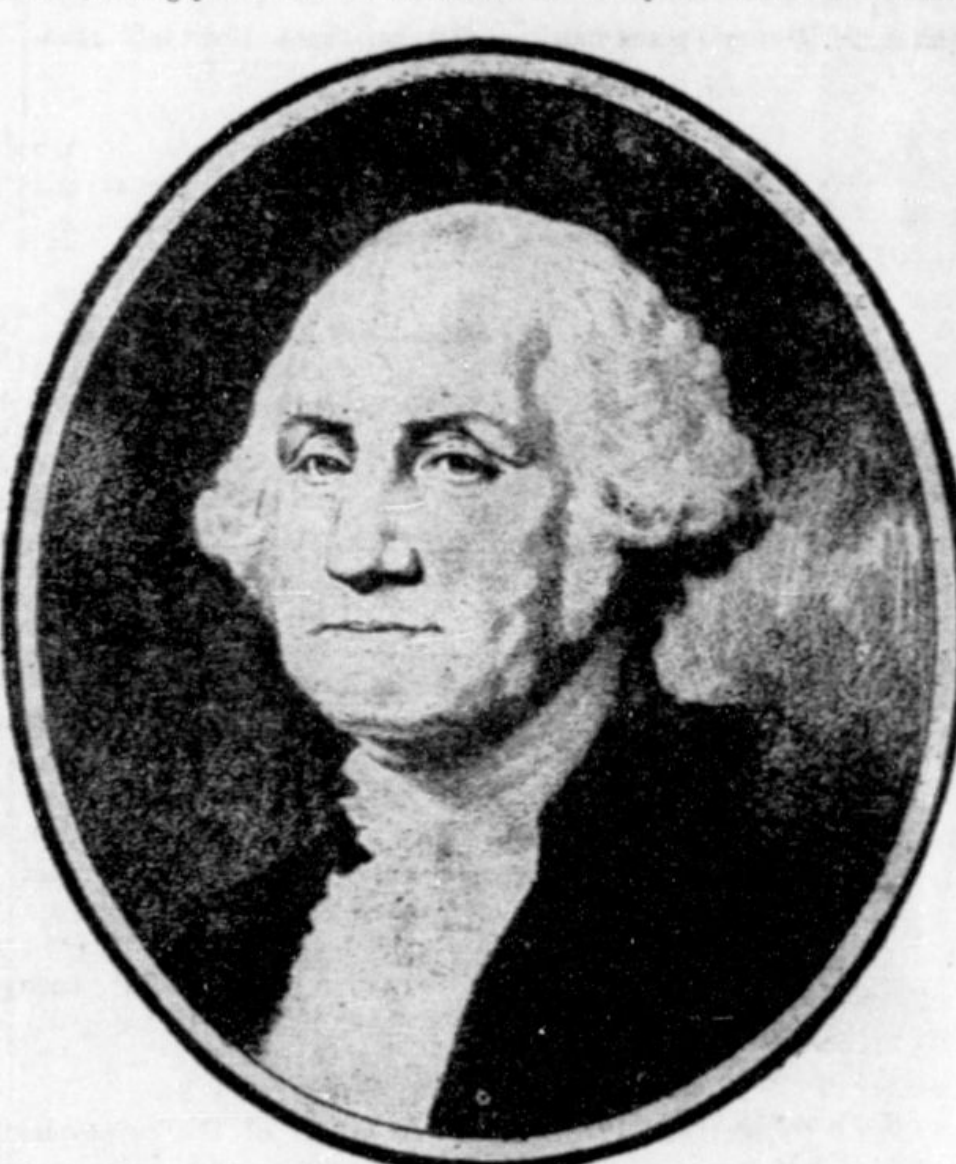

His hobby was hunting. Washington's stables were filled with the best animals that Virginia could furnish. He has set down in the register himself the "blooded coach horses" for Mrs. Washington's carriage, Magnolia, a full-blooded Arabian, used by its owner as a roadster, ponies for the children, and, finally, the high-bred hunters, Chinkling and Vallant, Ajax and Blueskin, and a score of others. In the morning he visited the stables first, and next he visited and inspected the kennels of the hounds Vulcan and Ringwood, Sinner and Truelove, Music and Sweetlips—all ready and eager to set the woods a-ringing with their baying.

The hounds met three times a week in the season. Off they would start at daybreak, Washington, splendidly mounted, generally on Blueskin, an iron-gray hunter, riding in the midst of the hounds. He wore a blue coat, scarlet waistcoat, buckskin breeches and a velvet cap. After him came the neighboring gentlemen and ladies, headed by Mrs. Washington, in a scarlet habit. There was no difficulty in finding, and away they would go after a big black or gray fox. The country was mostly wild and unfenced, offering rough and dangerous footing to the horses. Washington's diary of this time is filled with allusions to the sport. "Went hunting with Jacky Custis and caught a fox after three hours' chase; found it in the creek;" or, "caught fox with bob'd tail and cut ears, after seven hours' chase, in which most of the dogs were worsted;" and, "fox hunting with Lord Fairfax and his brother and Col. Fairfax; started a fox and lost it; dined at Belvoir and returned in the evening."

Washington was the soul of hospitality, and at few times, especially in the hunting season, was the house without guests. He liked life and gaiety and conversation, music and dancing, and a game of cards in bad weather, and he liked heartily the presence of young persons and friends.

At this time, too, Washington was a member of the house of burgesses. He was diligent in church affairs and very active in the vestry. In short, he was a thoroughly public-spirited citizen, taking part in all the serious business of the colony as well as its social life and pleasures.

Social Life of the President.
On court days he went to the courthouse with other gentlemen to listen to the arguments and hear the news. On his visits to Williamsburg his diaries tell us of a round of dinners, calls, theaters, and, on Sundays, church. So the reasonable, wholesome and happy current of life at Mount Vernon moved gently on till stirring public events diverted its course.

Washington's manner of living and his conduct of his private affairs while president was naturally very different from that of the plantation days. However, everything he did still evinced the simplicity and at the same time the wonderful dignity and poise of his character.

From his chief manager at Mount Vernon he exacted a full and exact weekly report. Once a week he wrote regularly to the manager, remarking on the report of the preceding week and adding new directions. He had not been long in New York before he found it necessary to establish rules for receiving visitors and entertaining company. There was no precedent to serve as a guide, and the matter was one of considerable delicacy and difficulty. The vice president, Mr. Jay, Mr. Madison, Mr. Hamilton and other gentlemen concurring, a set of regulations were adopted. Every Tuesday between the hours of three and four he was prepared to receive such persons as chose to call; foreign ministers, strangers and citizens came and went without ceremony. Every Friday afternoon the rooms were open in like manner for visits to Mrs. Washington, which were on a still more sociable footing, and at which Gen. Washington was always present. He accepted no invitations to dinner.

No visits were received on Sunday. In the morning the president uniformly attended church.

Washington here exercised the same care in the management of his household as at Mount Vernon. All accounts were scrutinized, and no extravagance or waste permitted. But with the strictest economy it is said that his expenses far exceeded his salary of $23,500.

The diary which Washington kept here, as all through life, is most interesting, and gives a pleasant glimpse of life in the capital of the United States at that day.

One day he writes: "Sat from nine until 11 o'clock for Mr. Trumbull to draw my picture in his historical pieces." Again: "Sat from ten o'clock till 11 for Mr. John Trumbull to draw my picture. A good deal of company (gentlemen and ladies) to visit Mrs. Washington this afternoon." In very many places he notes with apparent satisfaction the number and style of persons at these receptions. One Staudard writes: "Walked to my newly-engaged lodgings to fix on a spot for a new stable which I was about to build. Agreed with — to erect one 20 feet square, 16 feet pitch, to contain 12 stalls, etc., for $63."

Along with these homely notes are memoranda of state affairs and records of weighty discussions. During his term of office Washington made tours to the New England and southern states.

In His Retirement.

Soon after Washington's retirement to Mount Vernon he wrote to McHenry a letter, which gives a good picture of his life as he took it up again on his farm. "I find myself," he says, "in the situation nearly of a beginner; for, although I have not houses to build (except one, which I must erect for the accommodation and security of my military, civil and private papers, which are voluminous and may be interesting), yet I have scarcely anything else about me that does not require considerable repairs. In a word, I am already surrounded by joiners, masons, and painters, and such is my anxiety to get out of their hands that I have scarcely a room to put a friend into or to sit in myself without the music of hicle at the same time that another horseman rode up. The occupants were a man and a woman.

Actor Bernard's Meeting.
The stranger, all the time addressing a volley of invectives to the man, worked in the brooding sun with Bernard until the chaise was righted. "Then," recounts the actor, "my companion offered very courteously to dust my coat. He was a tall, erect, well-made man, advanced in years, but who appeared to have retained all the vigor and elasticity resulting from a life of temperance and exercise. His dress was a blue coat buttoned to his chin, and buckskin breeches. I failed to identify him, and to my surprise found I was an object of equal speculation in his eyes. But, after a moment's pause, he said: 'Mr. Bernard, I believe,' and mentioned the occasion on which he had seen me play in Philadelphia. He then asked Bernard to go home with him for a couple of hours' rest, and pointed out the house. Bernard at once exclaimed: 'Have I the honor of addressing Gen. Washington?' 'With assurance that I have never seen equalled,' continues the actor, 'he offered his hand and replied: 'An odd sort of introduction, Mr. Bernard; but I am pleased to find that you can play so active a part in private, and without a prompter.'"

WASHINGTON AT FIFTY-SIX.

Perhaps no man in private life ever submitted himself more often to the tender mercies of the portrait painter than Washington, and yet it has been said that few portraits resemble him. "There was an expression on Washington's face," writes Brissot de Warville, "that no painter had succeeded in taking." In 1777 Washington wrote: "I am so hackneyed to the touches of the painter's pencil that I am now altogether at their beck, and sit, like patience on a monument, whilst they are delineating the lines of my face. It is a proof of what habit and system can effect. At first, I was as impatient at the request and as restive under the operation as a colt is of the saddle. The next time I submitted very reluctantly, but with less flouncing. Now, no gray moves more readily to the mill than I do to the painter's chair." Among the most notable portraits of Washington are those by Peale, Wright, Ramage, Savage, Trumbull, Wertmuller, Vallee, Houston and those by Stuart. The original Stuart pictures were copied many times. There is one in the art institute concerning the authenticity of which there has been much discussion. Prince de Broglie, who saw Washington in 1782, wrote of him: "His physiognomy is mild and open. His accent is cold, although polite. His pensive gray eyes seem more attentive than sparkling, but their expression is benevolent, noble and self-possessed. In his private conduct he preserves that polite and attentive good breeding which satisfies everybody and that dignified reserve which offends no one. Modest even to humility, he does not seem to estimate himself at his true worth. He speaks but little in general, and that in a subdued tone."

The estimates which great men have placed upon Washington's character are almost unanimous in giving him rank with the noblest of all ages. Thomas Jefferson wrote: "I felt on his death, with my countrymen, that 'verily a great man hath fallen this day in Israel!'" Lord Brougham called Washington "the greatest man of our own or any age."

HIS REASON.

George—What did I do it for? Say, ain't a feller got ter git his name in inter hist'ry somehow?—N. Y. World.

The Aftermath.
"To-morrow, George," the old man said, as his brows met in a frown. "You may cut up that cherry tree, which you to-day cut down."
—Chicago Daily News.

A Birthday Lesson.
George chopped the cherry tree, my son. But that was slight beside. What cherry switches would have done to George if he had lied.
—Chicago Daily Record.

A Sardonic Opinion.
George Washington was good and great. But he had talked one-tenth as much as those who talk about him.

WOMEN OF THE UNITED STATES

Regard Peruna as Their Shield Against Catarrh, Coughs, Colds, Grip and Catarrhal Diseases.

MRS. BELVA A. LOCKWOOD, LATE CANDIDATE FOR THE PRESIDENCY.

Mrs. Belva Lockwood, the eminent barrister of Washington, D. C., is the only woman who has ever been a candidate for the President of the United States. She is the best known woman in America. As the pioneer of her sex in the legal profession she has gathered fame and fortune. In a letter to The Peruna Medicine Company, she says:

"I have used your Peruna both for myself and my mother, Mrs. Hannah J. Bennett, now in her 88th year, and I find it an invaluable remedy for cold, catarrh, hay fever and kindred diseases; also a good tonic for feeble and old people, or those run down, and with nerves unstrung."—Belva A. Lockwood.

Mrs. T. Felton, 562 St. Anthony avenue, St. Paul, Minn., writes: "Peruna has done wonders for me. It has cured my headache and palpitation of the heart; has built up my whole system. I cheerfully recommend Peruna to all sufferers afflicted with catarrh. My mother is never without Peruna. When one is tired and generally out of sorts, if Peruna is taken it immediately removes that tired feeling. Peruna cures catarrh by removing the cause, inflamed mucous membranes. Dr. Hartman, the compounder of Peruna, once said, in a lecture to women: 'A great number of women consult me every year. I often have occasion to say to these patients, 'I fear you have catarrh, madam.' They will generally reply, 'Oh, no, I never had catarrh. My nose is perfectly clear and my breath is not bad, I am not troubled with coughing or spitting or any other disagreeable symptoms of catarrh.' But, my dear madam, you may have catarrh all the same. Catarrh is not always located in the head. You may have catarrh of the lungs, or stomach, or liver, or kidneys, and especially of the pelvic organs.' The doctor went on to say: 'I have been preaching this doctrine for the last forty years, but there are vast multitudes of women who have never heard it yet. Catarrh may attack any organ of the body. Women are especially liable to catarrh of the pelvic organs. There are one hundred cases of catarrh of the pelvic organs to one of catarrh of the head. Most people think, because they have not catarrh of the head, they have not catarrh at all. This is a great mistake and is the cause of many cases of sickness and death.' If you do not derive prompt and satisfactory results from the use of Peruna, write at once to Dr. Hartman giving a full statement of your case and he will be pleased to give you his valuable advice gratis. Address Dr. Hartman, President of The Hartman Sanitarium, Columbus, O."

READ THESE TESTIMONIALS

From those who have used Smith's Sure Kidney Cure:
I had female trouble for over a year, and was confined to the bed for six months. I was treated by six different physicians, and they all said I was incurable. My last doctor was a skilled specialist, and he told me the only way I could be cured was by using SMITH'S SURE KIDNEY CURE. I heard of it and bought a bottle. I used it for one month and found myself cured, and even the doctor who had told me I was incurable was now my friend.

An Easy Winner.
A minister was one day walking along a road, and to his astonishment he saw a crowd of boys sitting in front of a ring with a small dog in the center. When he came up to them he put the following question: "What are you doing to the dog?" One little boy said: "Whoever tells the biggest lie wins it." "Oh," said the minister. "I am surprised at you little boys, for when I was like you I never told lies." There was silence for awhile, until one of the boys shouted: "Hand him up the dog!"—London Labor Leader.

An Eloquent Speaker.
Johnny—Pa, doesn't a man sometimes speak so rapidly that the stenographer can't follow him, and say so many wonderful things that they are lost in admiration of his eloquence?
Pa—Yes; I have heard that something of the kind does happen now and then. But why do you ask, Johnny?
"I notice that when you make a speech the papers always say: 'Mr. Breeze also spoke.'"—Boston Transcript.

Tact Equal to the Occasion.
A story is told of the wonderful tact, kindness and hospitality of one of the leaders of Baltimore society, who died recently. At one of her famous receptions a rather awkward young man, with little social experience, accidentally knocked over and smashed one of a pair of beautiful and costly vases. Seeing his chagrin and embarrassment, the hostess immediately put him at his ease by declaring: "Oh, Mr. —, I am so much obliged to you for breaking that vase. I never did like it, and I have been hoping that I could get rid of it somehow. Now that you have given me the excuse I am going to give myself the pleasure of smashing the other one," which she accordingly proceeded to do, although she prized the vases highly. It is said that to a shop girl or a theater ticket seller or anyone else who did her some favor or act of courtesy her thanks were so charming that the person thanked fairly worshipped her thereafter.—Baltimore Sun.
