FARMING.

The Principles and Practices in Kentucky Agriculture.

It has been shown in a way or another, that the best deal of the advantage for all depends on the amount of labor which can be done in a certain time. The more laborers a farmer has, the better off he is in the end. The old rule on this subject will no longer hold, and this applies as much to small farms as to large ones. There are quite a number of small farms on which which laborers are mostly working.

We may fairly compare the situation, for example, in the month of August. The ground is mown, the grain is stacked, the hay is cured, and the corn is cut. But the work is not done, for we have only begun.

It is just as true today as it was yesterday, that the best deal of the advantage for all depends on the amount of labor which can be done in a certain time. The more laborers a farmer has, the better off he is in the end. The old rule on this subject will no longer hold, and this applies as much to small farms as to large ones. There are quite a number of small farms on which which laborers are mostly working.

The yield, the growing, the cutting, the strawing, the weighing, and the selling, and the following of the crop has to be done just as right up to the time of giving it over to the crop.

The idea is to work this land out to the best of the seedbed. All the work that is going to make the difference is being done.

As the ground is mown, the corn is cut, and the hay is cured, the work is not done, for we have only begun.

The wood, the grass, the hay, the oats, the corn, and the potatoes are all used in the making of the food of the animals. The animals are then used in the making of the food of the people. The people, in turn, are used in the making of the food of the animals. This process goes on until the food is consumed, and the food that is consumed is then used in the making of the food of the animals.

NEELY VANDERBILT
An Enterprising Young Man Who Is Self-Made

Twenty years ago in New York City, the Tiffany Club was formed and is still in existence. The first bearer of the name was a citizen, Mr. Shibley, selected by 250 letters and seated at 454 Fifth Avenue. One of the members which added to the success of the club at that time was Neely Vanderbilt, and he is the proud owner of the club.

Mr. Vanderbilt, who is a member of the family, has been a successful speculator in gold, silver, and other commodities. During the period of the boom in the gold market, he made a large fortune, and has since invested his money in various business enterprises.

He is a member of the New York Stock Exchange and is one of the most active members of the club. He is also a member of the New York Yacht Club, and is a prominent figure in the social and political life of the city.

A Letter That Reveals Nothing of the Presence of the Sheriff at the Scene

Each nation has its own set of problems, and each, in its own way, is a reflection of the nation's character.

In this country, the problem of law and order is of particular concern. The United States has a long history of law enforcement, and it is a reflection of the nation's character.
