Gate of Odors.

When we studied physiology at school, we were told there are seven senses, one of which is the sense of smell. It is not that we gave any importance to this, but merely it was such a strange thing to have seven senses. The nail file of one's finger, the flower of a garden, the fragrance of a rose, are all to us, and our sense of smell is rather a queer one in the world. It is sort of a barometer, a sense of knowing whether or not there is a success or failure in our surroundings. The sense of smell is a very keen one in the world, and it is a sense that is very much appreciated by all people.
