THREE MEN ARE SHOT

Webster County Comes Near Being Scene of a Lynching.

Dixon Ky., March 15.—A determined mob of about seventy-five men pursued the Providence authorities to this city tonight in an attempt to lynch Jake McDowell, a negro who shot and fatally wounded Deputy Marshal Smith Childers at one o'clock this afternoon, and failing to outwit Deputy Sheriffs Gid Hubbard and L. G. Squalls and Fred Watson, a guard, who got possession of the prisoner from Marshal H. L. Sutton, of Providence, and escaped to Henderson, went out into the country in search of two negroes who shot two traveling men a short distance from this city.

The negroes thought the two traveling men were members of the mob and tried to kill them to prevent the lynching which was planned by the Providence people and would have been carried out had not the deputy Sheriffs escaped to Henderson.

The mob was composed of cool-headed, sober men who were where determined to avenge the shooting of Deputy Marshal Childers, but despite their quite movements the city of Dixon was thrown into a panic by the presence of the men.

The shooting of the traveling men occurred about two miles out of Dixon on the Lisman road and one of the men is said to be seriously injured.

Excitement was running high when the mob filed out of the city in good order and went in search of the negroes who fired the shots. The deputy sheriffs got away with McDowell before the mob reached the city and if they had not escaped as soon as they did the prisoner would have been hung to the first tree the mob could have been found.

The people are expecting to hear that the mob caught the negroes who shot the traveling men, and if the search is successful there will be a double hanging. The excitement is not expected to subside until after the unknown negroes are caught.

J. B. Barry Dead.

Evansville, Ind., March 16.—J. B. Barry, of Louisville, one of the victims of an ambush near Dixon Ky., Saturday night, died tonight at a hospital in this city. He was brought here yesterday for treatment and Dr. Edwin Walker found that his intestines had been perforated by bullets fired by negroes who ambushed Barry and P. B. Carter, a Chattanooga man who was driving with him from Providence to Dixon to see a lynching of Jake McDowell, a negro shot and probably fatally wounded Smith Childers, a deputy marshal, at Providence Saturday afternoon.

Carter's condition was a little improved tonight, but little hope is held out for his recovery. Both men were shot in the abdomen.

Mrs. Barry and her seven year-old son attended the bedside of the dying man, and will leave for home tomorrow, with the remains.

Anti-Spitting Ordinance Passed.

The Ladies Aid Societies of the several churches of this city, and the Noirma Club presented a petition to the city council Tuesday night asking that they pass some measures to prohibit spitting on the sidewalks and provide for new and suitable hitching rack for stock belonging to people coming to town.

The council passed an ordinance which imposes a fine of not less than $1 nor more than $5 for each offense of spitting on the sidewalk, or upon the floor of any public building, within the city of Marion.

The question of removing the hitching rack around the courthouse was placed in charge of the street committee, who will investigate the matter and it will be acted upon at an early date.

Last Wednesday afternoon, March 11, at two o'clock, at the bride's home on East Depot street, Miss Mabel Guess and Mr. Alvis Stephens were quietly married, Rev. J. F. Price officiating.

The happy young couple left immediately after the ceremony for the home of the groom's father, Mr. P. C. Stephens, of near Repton, where a sumptuous supper was served.

The bride is the daughter of Mr. T. C. Guess, of this city, and is an attractive young lady.

The groom is engaged in the hardware business and is a young man with exemplary habits.

Mr. and Mrs. Stephens will go to housekeeping this week in the residence recently vacated by Mr. Roy Gilbert, on Gum street, and have the best wishes of a host of friends.

Society in Fredonia.

Our aristocratic sister city of Fredonia was the scene of a most delightful social event when Mrs. J. W. Hughes entertained at lunch last Thursday afternoon. She was assisted by her niece, Miss Virginia Wyatt, in serving the refreshments, which were dainty and elegant, and consisted of cream, fruit and cake.

Among those who attended were noted the following:—Mrs. W. B. Davis, Mrs. Frank Hughes, of Crider, Mesdames Z. J. Crider Jr., John Wyatt, Gus Bentley, H. C. Rice, W. E. Cox, John Ray, Elbert Hilliard, Mary Clay Dulaney and Misses Ina Hillyard, Edna Cole and Georgia Boaz. No prizes were given. Mrs. W. E. According to information received by Sheriff Bryan Mr. Depp had received an anonymous letter about two months ago in which he was threatened

JURY MUST TRY CSAE

Judge Gordon Reverses HIS Previous Ruling.

Princeton, Ky., March 13.—Important in its present effects and its future possibilities was the victory won here to-day when Judge Fleming Gordon reversed his decision in the case of the Imperial Tobacco Company against several fire insurance companies and decided that a jury must try the action. He based his reversal upon an amended answer to the demurrer of the Imperial Company filed to-day by Bernard Flexner of Louisville, who, with Charles Shield, of Louisville, is counsel for the insurance companies. He had decided last week that the companies must pay the Imperial Company, which is the British end of the Tobacco Trust, $40,000 for damages done by night riders who burned warehouses here in September, 1906. This, if had been sustained by a higher court, would have meant that all insurance on Kentucky tobacco would have been canceled, as he decided that the riot and mob clause did not cover exemption from night riding losses. Organized outlawry was not provided for in the exemption clause, said Judge Gordon.

Tentatively this was sustained the Imperials demurrer to the answer of the companies to the original suit for $40,000. His decision of to-day reversed this and sustained the amended answer. He held that the answer presented a good defense.

The case will be tried in the courts here and Ward Headley, for the Imperial, will oppose Mr. Flexner and Mr. Shield. Upon the twelve men who will be selected depends all future risks on Kentucky tobacco.

Night Riders Work in Woodford County.

Versailles, Ky., March 14.—Three barns in Woodford county and one just across the line in Scott were burned early today by a party of masked men. The men were on horse back and in buggies and the party numbering not more than 50. A number of shots were fired, but so far as known nobody was hurt. The men came from the direction of Scott county. They cut all telephone wires and the amount of damage done is not yet known. Governor Willson and a party of legislators were returning from Lexington to Frankfort on a trolley car and ran through the party of night riders near McKee's Cross Roads without knowing it.

Louisville, Ky., March 14.—A band of night riders made a raid through Woodford county under the very eyes of Governor Willson and party of the legislators, last night. They destroyed four barns belonging to George Graddy, secretary of the Woodford County County Law and Order league; Jim Williams the turfman, and Hardin Rogers and George Strange. Gov. Willson and party had been to Lexington to a theater and were returning to Frankfort on and interurban line when, at McKee's crossing, a band of masked men rode within a few feet of the car, in plain view of the governor and his party. As soon as the motorman realized they were night riders he put on full speed to get the governor beyond danger. The barns were saturated with coal oil before being fired. The loss was several thousand dollars.

Mayesville, Ky., March 14.—The night riders last night destroyed 5,000 pounds of tobacco belonging to Milton McLain. They ordered Thomas Gray, the buyer, to leave town.

Fulton, Ky., March 14.—Two hundred night riders last night shot up the house of a negro who sold his tobacco to an independent buyer. No one was hurt by the fusillade, it is reported. This is the first raid in the county.

Mayfield, Ky., March 14.—Monroe Thompson and family, of Golo, Graves county, were warned by white caps to leave the county, under the threat of severe punishment if they refused to heed the warning. They immediately moved to Marshall county.

The warning was delivered in a mysterious way by four strangers, who rode by the house just at dusk. They met a boy, a short distance down the road from the house, and gave him a note, telling him to deliver it at the Thompson home.

The Thompson family are alleged to bear a bad reputation and were considered a nuisance to the community. They were given six days in which to vacate, but showed no disposition to take advantage of the limit of their time. "They stood not on the order of their going, but went" immediately.

Woodford Lighted by Blazing Barn.

Lexington, Ky., March 13.—The big tobacco barn on John Grady's farm, in Woodford county, near the Fayette county line, was burned to-night, and it is believed that Grady's announced intention of raising tobacco this season is responsible for the fire. The blazing structure was seen by a large party of politicians, both Democrats and Republicans, were returning to Frankfort from Lexington on an interurban car, after witnessing the play here to-night. Reports that a large party of night riders was out in it, but beyond the burning of the barn no other activity of night riders has been detected.

Mr. Grady, posing as an independent most prominent were exactly. He farmers of Wotton and I Society has been a strong Kidney Pills, which his man, and has been Taylor's as a determination to be in relieving me usual. The barn which symptoms, and is larger than tobacco giving them generally built, and was worth $2,000.

After the fire L. F. Johnson, the leader of the anti-Equity forces in Woodford county, called up Capt. B. G. Millikin, of this city, and asked him to take his famous bloodhound, Nick Carter, to the scene early in the morning. All of Capt. Millikin's dog are sick, and he told Mr. Johnson that he would be unable to him hunt down the men who set the building on fire.

It is impossible to communicate with Versailles by telephone to-night and confirmations of the rumors that a big body of night riders is in action is unobtainable. It is reported that one other barn was burned and that the night riders were last seen going toward Midway.

Cutting Down Electric Light Bills.

The incandescent electric lamp is, at first sight, one of the most commonly known and simplest devices with which we have to deal. The lamp in general use is labeled sixteen candle power, and the average user of these lamps is generally contented with the mere knowledge of how to turn his light on and off, and does not trouble himself much as to the economical use of his lamps further than to turn them off when they are not needed. He will undoubtedly grumble at times at the amount of his monthly bill for lighting, and will often be inconvenienced by the dimness of some of his lamps, but the deficiency in light is made good by turning on another lamp, and the monthly bill is further increased. It would probably never occur to him that it would be an actual economy in dollars and cents to throw away his old lamps and provide new ones at his own expense; and yet such is the case.

As simple a device as the incandescent electric lamp appears to be, it really requires considerable care and study to realize from it the maximum amount of light for the least money. Take the sixteen candle power lamp as a standard, the lamp in most general use; it consumes about fifty watts of current; that is, a 100-volt lamp will require one-half an ampere of current to bring it up to candle power when new. As the lamp grows older the carbon of the filament disintegrates to some extent, due to its high temperature, and is deposited on the interior surface of the lamp bulb, causing the familiar blackening of the lamp. This blackening reduces the amount of light given off by the lamp, and the reduction in size of the filament still further reduces the light, so that after a time lamp which gave originally sixteen candle power will not give ten or twelve candle power; and if it continues to burn long enough before breaking, its light may fall considerably below half of what it was when new.

While the light is thus rapidly diminishing during the life of the lamp, the current required to operate it diminishes also, but in a very much less degree. During the time the lamp first loses three or four candle power the diminution in the amount of current it requires is very slight, so that in effect it costs about the same to obtain twelve or thirteen candle power after the lamp has burned for some time as it does to obtain sixteen candle power when the lamp is new. After the lamps have lost 60 per cent. of their initial candle power it will be necessary to use two lamps to fill the place of the new one, and the cost of light to the consumer, per candle power, will be nearly doubled. From numerous experiments which have been made the fact has been established that there is a certain point in the life of a lamp when it becomes actually cheaper to throw away the old bulb and purchase a new one to replace it rather than to burn the old one any longer. This point in the life of a lamp has been termed the "smashing point," and varies to some extent with the quality of the lamp.

The "smashing point" cannot accurately be determined without rather extensive tests, but in general it is not necessary to determine it accurately. A variation of one or two candle power will hardly be perceptible under ordinary conditions. It is only when the lamp falls off three or four candle power that its dimness becomes appreciable, and it is a safe rule to follow, and it will prove more economical, to buy a new lamp rather than to burn an old one after its illumination in candle power becomes noticeable. By this is meant that it will be more economical for the amount of light obtained, because as the lamps fall off in candle power, more lamps must be burned to obtain the original amount of light. If the reduced quantity of light from old lamps is sufficient, as, for example, in halls and closets, it would still be cheaper to throw out the old lamps and replace them with new ones of smaller candle power.

Probably the extreme useful life of any lamp is not over 600 hours, and in most cases 300 to 400 hours would be a more economical life, but as keeping a record of the number of hours most lamps are burned would be impossible, the most convenient and economical method is to renew any lamp that is noticeably dim. There are any quantity of lamps which have been in service from 1,000 to several thousand hours which are erroneously believed to be very economical, as they have saved the cost of several renewals, but for the amount of light obtained from them the user probably paid from two to three times the price for current that a new lamp of the same candle power would require.

It will be readily seen that the initial cost of a lamp is a very insignificant part of its total cost. As a rough example, the cost of current for a sixteen-candle power lamp is commonly advertised as 1 cent per hour. If the lamp burns 600 hours it will cost $6 plus the initial price of the lamp—say a total of $6.25. This is, of course, only a rough approximation, but it shows very clearly that replacing an old lamp with a new one is vastly cheaper than burning an extra lamp to make up the deficiency in light. It can also be seen that as the first cost of the lamp is but a small fraction of its total cost, it will be economical to buy the very best lamp on the market. Here, as elsewhere, "Penny wise is pound foolish."—Technical World.

A Trail to Marion.

It would be impossible to describe in detail just what took place on the trail from Paducah to Marion—via Princeton and night riders—that Bros. Bebout, Ingram, Richardson and Freundlich followed on the 20th sleep, snow moon.

No sooner had they arrived at Marion than Bro. Bebout spied some soldiers in uniform, after which he disappeared, and when search was instituted he was found drilling in the court house yard, as if he intended joining the regular army. He was not seen again until supper time, when he marched into the dining room on the arm of the Captain of the State militia, and at once all privates, after proper salute, retired to the table in the corner as they are not allowed to mess with their superior officers.

During the afternoon we missed Bro. Geo. Ingram, and after diligent search found him in earnest conversation with Bro. Weldon and Wallace

How Many Bricks Have You Sent Away?

That sounds like a funny question, addressed to every citizen of this town and community, but it's really a serious one. Listen: There is now just completed a magnificent building of red brick exterior and concrete interior right in the business heart of one of the biggest of American cities. It occupies a whole block and calls itself in a large lettered sign "The Largest Monolithic Building in the World." It has many floors, with about a hundred acres of floor space. The entrances are of solid marble. The floors are beautifully tiled. Altogether it is a credit to the big city in which it stands. Oh, it's a Jim Dandy!

Now, how many bricks have you sent to the city to go into this big building? Honest, how many?

Of the hundreds of thousands of bricks put into the walls of this building the city where it stands has contributed not a single red brick. Country people, the people of small towns and cities far away from the big metropolis, have sent in the bricks for the construction of this splendid edifice.

You may have sent in a few hods of bricks yourself without knowing it.

Listen: This magnificent structure, which ornaments a city you probably never will see yourself, is built of bricks bought with the dollars of people living in towns just like ours—towns that would like to have some new brick buildings themselves now and then. Every dollar contributed to the city building fund means a nice, hefty hod of bricks for this big, beautiful skyscraper, "largest in the world" of its kind. This building was put up, through the kind donations of their unknown country cousins, by a firm that ran a small store in that city a few years ago.

But this firm conceived the cute idea of having thousands of strangers contribute bricks to build its fine, large, new store.

And the building is a Mail Order Store. See?

The unique way in which Hyomei is sold should dispel all doubt as to its curative properties, for Haynes & Taylor give their absolute guarantee to refund the price to any catarrh sufferer that Hyomei fails to benefit. JAMES H. TRAVIS.

A Tribute of Respect by Rev. Jas. F. Price.

There are several reasons why I should offer this tribute of respect to the revered name of Uncle Harvey Travis. During the period of my childhood and youth he was one of our nearest neighbors and was constantly associated with us in the pleasant relation of neighborhood. Being a close relative, increased my esteem for him and his interest in us. He was my teacher during one term of school, and the principles he implanted in my life are living today. Uncle Harvey was the friend who went with me to Marion when I got my first certificate to teach school, and through his suavity and tact that certificate was procured without an examination. In my early religious life he was my adviser and helper. Through all my years of ministry he has been my constant counselor and friend, sympathizing with me in my trials and rejoicing in my successes.

Uncle Harvey was of that sturdy Scotch-Irish stock—that stock which has furnished to this country so many pioneers, penetrating the wilderness and preparing it for our delightful abode—that stock which has bedecked the galaxy of fame with such worthy names as Paul Jones, Commodore Perry, Andrew Jackson, Winfield Scott, Zachary Taylor, U. S. Grant, Stonewall Jackson, Geo. B. McClellan, Alexander Hamilton, John C. Calhoun, Jas. G. Blaine, Jefferson Davis, Thomas Benton, John G. Carlisle, Mark Hanna, Wm. McKinley, Andrew Carnegie, John D. Rockefeller, Horace Greely and Henry Watterson. This shows that he came of no ignoble stock.

He was a man of fine common sense. He delighted in reading and was a man well informed for his day and circumstances.

He was the father of a large family, eighteen children in all, yet their devotion to him was evidence of his splendid paternal character. This was shown by their annual gathering on his birthday, the 5th day of December. On this day his children, grand-children and great-grand-children would gather from different counties, spread a feast and refresh this aged progenitor with a day of social conversation and delight.

Uncle Harvey was a fine conversationalist. Gifted in language, apt in expression, magnetic in character, vivid in portraiture, he could grace the social circle with brilliant wit and thought, or hold the mongrel crowd on the street corner spell-bound for hours. The pictures of Uncle Harvey's conversations are vivid to many today.

In Bible knowledge he was one of the most profound laymen I have ever met. He delighted in the Bible and studied it earnestly. He was independent in his thought and when he came from his study with an opinion it was worth hearing.

He professed religion at Piney Fork camp ground when a young man. He was at his aunt Silva Foster's and heard them talking about him and became convicted. Barney Clinton took him out to secret prayer and thus his convictions were deepened. That night he made a confession of faith in Christ. When Sugar Grove church was organized he became one of its ruling elders. When Cave Spring church was organized he transferred his membership thither. His peculiar gifts gave him great power in church service. He was a fine singer and able in prayer, gifted in speech and efficient in every line of church work. He had strong appetites and passions with which to contend; yet he fought the battle bravely and was crowned with the laurels of victory. Inheriting a strong appetite for ardent spirits and with his genial social turn, it was a struggle to keep his lips from the sparkling cup, but in the last months of his life anything intoxicating was utterly repugnant to him. He had a very strong, high temper. It was easy, under provocation, for him to lose control of himself and say and do things that seem shocking to us in our sober moments; but in the last few years of his life he seemed to have perfect control of his temper and was calm and deliberate under the most fretting circumstances. A life-long slave to tobacco in the last few months of his life he laid it aside as easily as a child does a worn out toy when something new is presented. In fact he told the writer at different times before his death that nothing now gave him any trouble, that every foe was laid low at his feet, that every appetite and passion was completely subdued, that material things had no attraction for him, but that the heavenly mansions would sweep in his view as a promised sequel of the toils and hardships of life. Like a ripe shock of corn he came to his death sweetened in grace and enriched in spiritual power. It was no hardship for him to die. Like Elijah he smote the flood of Jordan with the mantle of faith, the waters rolled back he walked into his celestial mansion high accompanied by a convoy of angels for which so many have heard him pray. In the strength of immortal youth he now walks the golden streets and sweeps his glittering lyre with the sweet symphonies of heaven.

Night Riders Take No Chances.

Owenton, Ky., March 12.—Citizens of Owenton were surprised and alarmed this morning to learn that a band of 100 armed and masked night riders came within two miles of Owenton last night, and were of this place from a raid on the city only deferred. 100 hundred citizens by presence of a guard immediately after the raid at Owenton. Some of the guards who were at the outskirts of town discovered them about midnight, several men skulking around and evidently reconnoitering, but the officers were unable to get hold of them. They followed the scouts a short distance out, and found a large body of men—about 100 strong. The scouts reported to the main body, and the entire band turned and rode off rapidly before the guards could get near them.

The grand jury, which was empaneled this morning, has already begun to investigate the outrages in this and adjoining counties, and Judge Cammack delivered one of the strongest charges on the subject that has ever been read in the Owen courthouse.

WHAT THE KIDNEYS DO.

Their Unceasing Work Keeps Us Strong and Healthy.

All the blood in the body passes through the kidneys once every three minutes. The kidneys filter the blood. They work night and day. Healthy they remove about 500 blood impurities matter daily, when the impure matter of this impure blood is left in the blood. This unhealthy matter causes and symptoms—pains in the back, nervousness, hot, dry skin, rheumatism, gout, gravel, disorders of the eyesight and hearing, dizziness, irregular heart, debility, drowsiness, dropsy, deposits in the urine, etc. But if you keep the filters right you will have no trouble with your kidneys.

A. H. Fritts, living on Depot St., Mariya, Ky., says: "I know Doan's Kidney Pills to be an effective and thoroughly reliable kidney remedy and unequalled for the purposes they are intended. For some time I had an acute lameness in my back commonly called a 'criek' which caught when arising from a stooping position. The kidney secretions were exceedingly irregular in action and I felt miserable. Doan's Kidney Pills, which I procured at Haynes & Taylor's drug store, were prompt in relieving me these annoying symptoms, and have no hesitation in giving them the highest endorsement."

For sale by all dealers. Price 50 cents. Foster-Milburn Co., Buffalo, New York, sole agents for the United States.

The earnestness of the Baptist faith and the meeting was conducted at that church but the interest was general and the good results will be felt throughout the community. Rev. Conway preached thirty-four sermons and while there were but two conversions he never discouraged in his work. He is very popular with our people who recognize in him an earnest, faithful and true worker for the cause of religion.—Banner.

The Parisienne's Dress is Always Appropriate.

If Lent cast any shadow at all over the gaiety of the French capital it merely throws a temporary mist over its brilliancy. But, like all else, Lent sits, lightly on the conscience of the Parisienne, and her costumes lose nothing of their originality and charm during the forty days of penance.

The Parisienne in chic in her trotteur, spirituelle in her tea-gowns, ravishing in décolleté—always Parisian.

And what is "Parisian?" A mere name a vague, intangible quality that one can neither name nor define? Not at all. It is something quite definite and concrete, a unique attribute that is peculiar to the French woman.

It is novelty dash, the sixth sense in dress that raises with a touch the simplest costume above the plane of the commonplace. It is an instinct that warns her against what has been teachers her to pass what is, and prompts her to reach out towards what will be.

The Anglo-Saxon is conservative cautious to a fault, says Mrs. Osborn in the Delineator for April. She criticises, wavers, waits. By the time she adopts an idea the Parisienne has dropped it and turned to something else. When the American or English woman wears a last year's gown you are immediately aware of it. You commend her good sense and spirit of economy and leave her with a fretful feeling of ennui. But the Frenchwoman! It may be the extra inch to the width of her hair, to the height of her heels, to the line of her collar, or the smart bow at her throat that catches your eye and blind you to the fact that her gown is a old one.

You may dislike the arrangements of her hair, you may watch breathless to see her come to grief with her heels. Her collar may make you gasp for breath. Yet withal you watch her. "Ah, that is new," you say. She piques your interest and holds it. She makes you forget that she is not beautiful in her appeal to one of the strongest of human qualities, the love of novelty and change.

Night Riders Burn Thresher.

A band of night riders burned a thresher owned by John Langford, near Port Royal. Mr. Langford recently sold his farm to Doc Foust who lives on it. The night riders went to the place, rolled the thresher that belonged to Langford out of the barn and set fire to it, being very careful, however, to place it at a safe distance from any other property which might catch fire. After having set fire to the thresher they went to the home of a neighbor and told him to go over and watch the blaze so that the barn would not catch fire. The man went to Foust's home a few minutes away and called Mr. Foust out and told him to go and see that nothing else except the thresher was burned. The men then separated, going in different directions. Mr. Langford did not belong to the Association, and had moved to Sumner county. It was his intention to move his threshing machine to his new home as soon as the condition of the roads justified.—Clarksville Leaf Chronicle.

Night riders visited the home of a cropper on L. C. Jenkins' farm near Port Royal, last night and whipped him severely. There seemed to be a large number of men out in that community last night, seven of whom went to the local office of the Telephone company, called Mathew Sawyer, the operator, to the door and told him to either cut the wires or give them a pair of shoes. They would do the work. One of the crowd cut the wires. Another cut two miles of wire between Clarksville and Stroudsville. Welch is marked of the beating he received. All of the men are said to have been masked.

Several nights ago Jonas Stacy near Sango, is said to have been taken from his home and severely beaten. Since the assault he has been staying in Clarksville.—Kentucky New Era.

A Birthday Dinner.

Mr. S. J. Lowery one of Livingston county's best citizens celebrated his seventy second birthday, Monday, March 9th, by inviting a number of his relatives and friends to take dinner with him. After the guests were all assembled he was presented with several nice presents, as tokens of the high esteem, which he is held even down to old age, after which we repaired to the dining room where the table groaned with good things. Lowery his estimable wife showed just how to prepare a sumptuous dinner in Kentucky style. May Mr. Lowery live to see many more happy birthdays. A GUEST.

Night Riders Drop a Few Words to a Farmer in Colloay.

Paducah, Ky., March 12.—The night riders continuing in Colloay county as announced by the reports reaching here yesterday, as Mr. Patterson of this vicinity, who came to Paducah last evening stated that the night before a band of about fifty of the riders visited the home of Moses Thorton, who resides two miles east of Pottertown, Colloay county, and served notices on him. Thorton belongs to the tobacco growers association, but it is claimed he sold and delivered about one-half of his crop to buyers without selling it through the organization like all members pledge themselves to do. He has been notified not to do this any more, and in order to avoid trouble promised not to grow any of the weed this year. Monday night the band called on him and ordered him to raise a crop this year like he does annually, but warned him against disposing of it except through the association. He promised them he would most assuredly "be good" hereafter and do as directed. He is a well-known farmer of that vicinity. No personal violence was offered him, the riders simply giving the notice in the manner showing that they were determined.

Some think the band came from across the river in that vicinity, but the general opinion prevails they did not.

Saint Patrick the Irish Ideal

By Joseph W. Gavan.
Copyright, 1908, by Joseph W. Gavan.

ST. PATRICK in the eyes of the Irish people embodies all that is good in humankind. Brave, considerate, faithful and gentle even the boasts of the field, but the enemy of the things that crawl and that love the darkness, he stands forth as a noble example of a people's aspirations, and other nations may well bow in reverence when they hear his name.

He alone among all the apostles found a people pagan and left them entirely Christian. While the land of his birth and the place where he rests his mortal remains are matters of dispute, yet his personality stands out before us as vivid and as bold as though sketched by an artist. His works are his biography. Only a person of his caliber could appeal to the hearts, the eyes and the brains of a people such as the Irish were in the fifth century. He found them noble, chivalrous, ardent, far advanced in culture, social refinements and the arts of peace and enjoying the benefits of a civilization derived from a former effort under St. Germanus to Christianize them. The Irish were then organized in clans, the head of each clan being a chieftain who carried on the government of his tribe under an admirable constitution known as the Brehon laws. On this natural basis Patrick built with supernatural wisdom his edifice. He blessed and purified what was not contrary to the gospel, and within his own lifetime he saw the sons and daughters of Irishmen thronging his churches and monasteries and causing the praises of the Creator to resound on every plain where idols had been adored, on every hill where false gods had been propitiated or the spirits of earth, air or sea mollified by superstition. Transport yourself in imagination to sure his hearers that a light is burning in Erin that evening which will never be extinguished. He has confounded the Druids and turned the tables upon them and their doctrines in presence of the kings and the chieftains of the nation.

One remarkable instance of Patrick's extraordinary cleverness and of his readiness to avail himself of a simple illustration in order to bring conviction home to his hearers comes down to us from his day. While the young missionary is discussing the doctrine of the Trinity one of the Druid priests interrupts him by challenging Patrick to explain how there are three Gods in one.

This is evidently quite a poser to the illiterate pagans who sit around the royal circle. Patrick, suiting the action to the word, stoops down and, plucking a single leaf of shamrock from the sward beneath him, holds it up to the astonished gaze of the multitude and explains that as the three leaves emanated from a single stem so there are three Gods in one and one in three.

One can easily imagine even at this distance of time with what thundering shouts of patriotic applause this explanation involving the shamrock is received by the primitive Irish. It was by arts like these quite as much as by the force and beauty of Christian principles that St. Patrick accomplished his purpose and established his right to the chief apostleship of Ireland.

At Downpatrick is the graveyard in which the saint was buried. His grave is a grass grown mound marked at the head by three rough stones. It is open—the authorities never close it—because every day people piously ride the untenanted sepulcher and take away some of the earth. They preserve the plains of Royal Meath Easter Sunday morning in the year 432. The land around is beautiful to behold, fruitful, undulating and covered on every side with lovely woods. Before us stands the hill of Tara. The summit is crowned with a palace of Ireland's king. As we enter a strange night presents itself to our view. Ireland's monarch sits on his throne in high council. Around him are the kings and chieftains of the nation, for Ireland was then divided into four kingdoms. Around these, again, on both sides are the pagan priests, the famous old Druids of fire worship.

Still in another great semicircle are seated on thrones the ancient minstrels of Ireland, with snow white flowing beards, their harps before them, filling the morning air with the glorious melody of Erin's music and accompanying the strains with the honored story of Ireland's heroes and her glorious kings.

Suddenly a shadow falls upon the threshold. A man appears, miter on head, crozier in hand, with the cross of Christ stamped on it. All look on the intruder in amazement. Who is he? What great message does he bring? It is the great St. Patrick, the former wine-bearer, now commissioned by Pope Celestine to preach the gospel to the Irish kings and their people. How do the kings and chieftains receive this strange visitor? As becomes a highly civilized and enlightened people.

The kings and chiefs and Druids and bards listen earnestly to this man of high ideals, and Patrick makes the best possible means of his great opportunity. The Druid priests had ordered fires to be lighted on the neighboring hills of Meath and Louth in honor of the gods.

Patrick makes such great headway in his first sermon that in winding up he utilizes the beacon lights to assured the sacred dust and ask their nearest and dearest to place some in their coffins, "for," they argue, "it is good to have this holy clay, and whoever rests in the same earth as St. Patrick will rise to glory with him and stand in his shadow on the judgment day."

"WEARING AV THE GREEN."

A bit av tune to me ear is brought By a passing, vagrant breeze, A bar from a tune me ears once knew In a land across the seas. It's the dear old "Wearing av the Green."

And it bears me far away: In mind and heart I'm in Erin's isle, And it's morn, St. Patrick's day.

St. Patrick's day in the morning there— 'Twas many a year ago— I traveled a road to Donaghmore With a girl I used to know, And she had a ribbon in her hair As green as the emerald sod, And we tramped that way as gay a pair As ever the dear soil trod.

When old the day, in the deepening dusk, Once again we came that way. The path we trod was a glory road, 'E'en though the dark shadows lay Athwart the path, for love shone bright As stars in the blue o'erhead. We whispered o'er, as we tripped along, The words that the priest had said.

St. Patrick's day, and I'm far away From the isle av emerald shoen, And many a year a dear grave there Has been wearing av the green. Ah, 'tis here am I in freedom's land— Please God I'm here to stay— But me heart and soul go home each year For to spend St. Patrick's day. ARTHUR J. BURDICK.

How Tom Grady Were the Green

A Love Story of St. Patrick's Day In Sackett's Junction.

By Izola L. Forrester.
Copyright, 1908, by M. M. Cunningham.

WHEN the construction gang took possession of Sackett's Junction Kitty O'Reilly took possession of the gang.

"They're a fine lot, Kitty," said old Mike O'Reilly, "even if they are a lot of guineas and greasers and such for eigners. 'Tis from the stranger within our gates that we get the goods, Kitty, and if he won't give them to us of his own free will then we take them from him by gentle persuasion. Kitty, you are the gentle persuasion of Sackett's Junction. You go right over and talk to whoever's the king of the whole bunch and tell them you're the finest cook in Arizona and your dad can furnish meal tickets to the whole crowd of them at a price that would bankrupt any chink cook this side of Frisco."

Kitty delivered the message of her father in her own sweet way to the king of the bunch, and the king was neither guinea nor greaser, but Tom Grady, from Kansas City. Tall was Thomas, six feet two, with the shrewd, blue eyes of Erin and the curl of sunset tinted locks.

"We will eat with you; tell the old man," said Tom Grady, and while his manner was sedate and his tone most respectful, as befitted a five minutes' acquaintance, yet his eyes told Kitty that she was the fairest creature he had looked upon in all his life.

"I do the cooking," said Kitty, and the way of her smile and voice was most bewildering to a man with a free heart under his coat.

"Heaven, bless the cook!" laughed Tom, and he stood on the hillside looking after her as she tripped back across the wash. "And, sure, you can cook for me all my life, with the sweet smile of you and the tender glance of you. It's fried doornat I'd be eating with a relish if you gave it to me."

on the floor for the last dance just above his heart was pinned the favor she had given him. It was only a little shamrock made of wire and green silk, the kind they sell on the street corners St. Patrick's day, but Kitty had worn it in her hair all the evening stuck in sideways, like the coquette she was, just above her pretty ear, and it was the sign of both his victory and her thralldom to Tom Grady.

But suddenly as the two stepped out on the floor to take their places in the reel a figure appeared in the doorway, and old Mike gasped and ducked under a table and quietly, soberly prepared for sudden death. It was a picturesque figure in its way—tall, but not so tall as Tom; slender and dark, and the chaps he wore were splashed as from a fording and dusty from heavy riding. Straight up to where Kitty stood he walked, and, flipping the sombrero he wore from his head, he cast it at her feet. In its cord was stuck a green silk shamrock.

"There's mine," he said, "and I've ridden 200 miles to claim the promise you made me last year on it."

Tom laughed.

"You're too late in the coming, my boy. She's made me a fresh one to-night, and she's going to keep it."

"She's a flirt!" cried the other. "What right has she to give two of these things with two promises?"

"She can do just as she pleases," said Tom loyally. "I don't care if she scatters shamrocks from Sacramento to Key West, but she's going to marry me next month. Now, see here; I'm sorry for you, my boy. You've come a long way, and you're in a devil of a temper, and I don't blame you. I'd be the same if I was as near losing Kitty O'Reilly as you are this night. But I'll play you fairly for her, al-

Saint Patrick and the Angel

Miraculous Manner in Which the City of Armagh and Its Beautiful Cathedral Were Founded.

The Old Cathedral Burned by the Danes and Anglo-Normans—Shane O'Neill and His Soldiers.

(Copyright, 1908, by American Press Association.)

THE small city of Armagh is the most beautiful inland town of Ireland, and is the ecclesiastical capital of the country. The meandering river Callan flows close by, and the situation, diversified with hill and dale, is replete with scenes of great natural beauty. The city, venerable for its antiquity and famous in the annals of Ireland, owes its origin and ecclesiastical pre-eminence to St. Patrick, who in the year 445 erected a cathedral and other religious houses there.

St. Patrick's cathedral in Armagh, though not occupying the site of the old cathedral established by St. Patrick, is entitled to be regarded as its ecclesiastical successor and lacks not its link with the remote past. The foundation stone of the new cathedral was laid on March 17, 1840, and it was completed in 1873. The style of the structure is decorated Gothic of the fourteenth century. The total length of the cathedral is 210 feet; combined width of nave and aisle, 72 feet; width across the transepts, 112 feet; height quired for him through most hard labor and by thy powerful preaching, which by the grace of the Holy Spirit has proved most enlightening and fruitful to all the tribes of Ireland. In this apostolic work thou wert always most laborious and at many times in many dangers from the gentiles, in cold and heat, hungry and thirsty, passing diligently from tribe to tribe for the salvation of many.

"Therefore the Lord knows thy present place, situated on a hill, with a small cell, narrow and also circumscribed by certain inhabitants of the district, and its suburbs do not suffice as a refuge, wherefore the following vast boundary is fixed for the city of Armagh, which thou hast loved above all the other lands of the Irish—that is from the summit of Slieve-Mult to Slieve-Mis, from Slieve-Mis to Bri-erigi, from Bri-erigi to Slieve-Bregh. Certainly, if thou wishest, it shall be of this magnitude. And, furthermore, the Lord God hath granted to thee all the tribes of the Scots (Irish) as a diocese and attached to this thy city.

ST. PATRICK'S CATHEDRAL, ARMAGH.

from floor to ridge, 110 feet; height of two western spires, 210 feet.

The foundation stone of the cathedral was laid by the Rev. William Croly, D. D., the one hundred and fifth successor of St. Patrick in the see of Armagh. Over the front door of the cathedral is the inscription, "Sol Deo Omnipotenti, Trino in Personis, Sub Invocatione Scti Patritii, Hibernorum Apostoli," which Anglicized reads, "To the One God Almighty, Three in Persons, Under the Invocation of St. Patrick, Apostle of Ireland."

The memories of close upon fifteen centuries cling around the old cathedral established by St. Patrick. It was ravaged and burned by the Danes, subsequently by the Anglo-Normans and was almost entirely destroyed by fire in 1404.

In 1500 the primate of Ireland preached in the cathedral before Shane O'Neill and 600 of his soldiers. In his sermon he recommended loyalty to the English king, which so enraged O'Neill that he burned the cathedral and pillaged the city of Armagh. Another chief of the same clan, Sir Phelim O'Neill, set fire to the cathedral in 1642.

which is called in the language of the Scots (Irish) Ardd Macha—the height of the field.

"St. Patrick, with face prostrate on the ground in sight of the angel, said, 'I give thanks to my God, eternal Lord, who hath deigned in his clemency to bestow such glory on his servant.'"

WHEN NORA PLAYS THE HARP.

WHEN pretty Nora's dainty fingers
The harp strings travel o'er and o'er,
The music in my memory lingers
Like light upon a sunset shore.

So rich the melodies, so thrilling
The undertones of love they speak,
That Nora on my heartstrings
Will
(I fancy) plays at hide and seek.
