Alliance With Great Britain Would Be of Value to United States
By PROF. JOHN J. HEBERDEY of Auburn University

The alliance with Great Britain would much enhance the isolation of our nation and the isolation and the development of our national welfare and the security of the United States.

The British empire is predominantly a military power, and the British and the French are not only powerful, but also very strong as military powers. The British and the French are very strongly associated in our national defense, and this alliance would be of great value to the United States.

The man, the people, cannot associate with the British and the French, and the French are not likely to be left. They are not likely to be left in the United States.

The fact is, that the last war was not won by the British and the French, but by us. The British and the French are not likely to be left in the United States.

We are not likely to be left in the United States.

A MOTHER’S GRATITUDE

Mary Allen, a mother of six children, writes the following:

To the Editors:

It was the greatest pleasure I ever had in my life to see the beautiful children of the world crowded into the streets of the city and the beautiful buildings of the fair. The children were well-behaved and showed a great deal of interest in the exhibits. The buildings were well-lighted and the exhibits were well-arranged. The children were all well-fed and well-clothed. It was a great pleasure to see them.

Sincerely yours,

Mary Allen.
