A victory parade down the streets of New York, with the Legionnaires marching to the strains of the national anthem, was the opening feature of the day. The parade was followed by the Legionnaires' annual veterans' day program, which was held at the Grand Opera House. The program was given a standing ovation by the audience.

WHILE AT WAR

CHAPTER XV.

The summer afternoon had brought a sense of relief to the weary soldiers. The sun was high in the sky, casting long shadows across the battlefield. The sounds of battle had quieted, replaced by the soft rustling of leaves and the distant calls of birds. It was a moment of respite, a chance to reflect on the events that had brought them to this point.

As the soldiers sat in their foxholes, the air was thick with the smell of smoke and the acrid taste of gunpowder. The heat was oppressive, but it was a small price to pay for the freedom they had fought so hard to protect. The men were tired, but their spirits were high. They knew that they were making a difference, that their sacrifices were not in vain.

The cheers of the crowd had faded into the background, replaced by the steady rhythm of the drum. The men listened attentively, their eyes fixed on the speaker. They were eager to hear what the general had to say, to hear his words of encouragement and his plans for the future.

The general stood at the front of the line, his voice resounding through the camp. "Friends, " he began, "we have faced many challenges, but we have overcome them all. We have fought with courage and determination, and we will continue to do so until the end.

We have lost many brave men on this field of battle, but we will not forget them. Their memories will live on, inspiring us to keep fighting. We will not give up until the day we are free.

The battle is not over yet, but we are close to victory. We have the strength and the will to win, and we will. We will not back down until the war is over.

This is our chance to make a difference, to change the world. We have the power to do it, and we will. We will not give up until the day we are free.

We will not give up until the day we are free.

The men cheered, their voices echoing through the camp. They were ready to fight, to do whatever it took to ensure the future of their country. They knew that the battle was not over yet, but they were ready to face whatever came their way.

The general's words were a beacon of hope in the midst of the chaos. They were a reminder of the courage and determination that had brought them to this point. They were a promise of a brighter tomorrow. The men knew that they had the strength to overcome any obstacle, and they were ready to fight for their country.

We told you we had gone after and secured the exclusive sales for this in section.

This picture shows the counter side of the new Vap-Hydrin, the Universal Steam Purifier, which we told you last week — and we stand back for the endorsement for, by now a model of the most modern and best of the latest medical laboratories in the United States, with all the rage and the physical reception. We know what it is and what it make is. It is in the production of eight machines from the medical arts, both as far as these offers and fabricates, whose products and equipment are here for us at the medical building for several days, and not so much for the scientific method of the monitor method as for the scientific method of the monitor method.
