CHAPTER IX.

Long before the dawn.

After breakfast, the men assembled in the smokehouse and engaged in a discussion of the prospects for the day's work. The job of cutting the trees and felling the stumps was to be accomplished by two strong men, and the job of cleaning the logs and sawing them into boards was to be done by a third. The coffee was made, and the meal was eaten, and the work was begun.

The morning was clear and bright, and the sound of the axes and the saws was heard throughout the valley. The men worked hard, and the day passed quickly. By evening, the job was finished, and the logs were stacked in readiness for the mill.

CHAPTER X.

Hurry talks.

A hurry talk was held in the evening, and the men discussed the plans for the next day's work. The weather was expected to be good, and the men were confident that they could complete the job in one day.

The hurry talk was ended, and the men went home to their families. They were tired, but they were pleased with their work.

CHAPTER XI.

The morning is the best time.

The morning was clear and bright, and the men were up early. They assembled in the smokehouse and began their work. Not in a day’s journey is there another Christmas store like this--

Y’ALL treat a white boy before you find a store like this--it’s hard to believe another day back to get to the High Art store, after you find that this really...it’s like magic to find such a store so...now the Christmas spirit pervades the High Art store. All the art things that mean more later...it’s special, from the maker things. But say: “Boy, man, there is no...it’s really nice for a Christmas gift.”

From the complete shortages we support, a few of the likker gift things:
- Stores of Mason or Whiskey
- High Art Suits
- High Art Overcoats
- High Art Suits
- High Art Shoes
- High Art Hats
- High Art Gloves
- High Art Jackets
- High Art Ties
- High Art Scarf
