THE MONTAGUE LIGHT OPERA SINGERS.

TREASURY OFFICIAL TO BE HERE

Our post master Jesse Olive informs this newspaper that he has made arrangements with the Postal Department whereby a special representative of the Treasury Department will visit this city for three days beginning March 1st.

"Ever since the war," said Postmaster Olive, "The Postal Department has aided in every possible way the Treasury Department in getting before the people the value of the securities issued by the Government."

"While a large sum has been poured into the Treasury, and has aided very much in restoring conditions to normal, the chief aim of the Government is to promote thrift."

It was my personal and urgent request that the representative be assigned to my office. He will be there during the business hours for the three days named and will give information to any citizen who is interested.

MONTAGUE LIGHT OPERA SINGERS.

Light opera always popular with the masses, is featured in costume by the Montague Singers in each of their programs.

Selections from such favorite light operas as "The Serenade," "Robin Hood," "The Pied Piper," "The Mikado," "The Red Mill" and "Madame Butterfly" are given in special costume.

Popular quartette selections are also rendered; also solos, duets, trios, readings and character impersonations.

The Montague Light Opera Singers comprise one of the strongest mixed quartettes on the platform; their ensemble harmony showing the beautiful blending of voices only possible by finished artists.

John Eichenberger and Altha Montague will be most favorably remembered by all who heard the "Kellogg-Haines Singing Party" on the Chattanooga.

Altha Montague, contralto and reader, is a charming singer, of very attractive personality, with wide experience in concert, oratorio and church solo work. As a reader, she is very effective, showing marked ability in interpretation of character.

Edna Reynolds, soprano, has appeared extensively as soloist with large chorus societies. She has a voice of unusual sweetness, sympathy and flexibility.

Haydn Thomas, bass and accompanist, has sung leading roles with the Aborn Opera company, the Savage Opera company and Joseph Sheenan's English Opera company. His voice has a pleasing mellowness, it is powerful and even, and always well controlled.

John Eichenberger, manager of the Montagues and tenor, has had extended operatic and stage experience. He has a clear, strong voice of rare quality and his character songs in costume are one of the features of the program.

CREAM INDUSTRY A GROWING ONE

ONE STATION SHIPS 4,000 POUNDS MONTHLY

This Industry Destined to Become One of Crittenden's Biggest Money Makers

Of the many business enterprises that are beneficial to a community for its progressiveness and finance, Dairy farming is probably the most important. A few years ago dairy farming was unthought of in Crittenden County, Cream separators were a thing for millionaires, a patent milk was a fairy story, and the few old cows were just boarding with the farmer. He raised his cow from a calf and kept her until she died, whether she was giving a quart or a gallon of milk, she run on the pasture whether it had grass or not, if a few small ears of corn too small to feed to the horse, rolled down into the crib they were thrown out to her, and if part of the hay was mouldy, she got that, or in other words she was used as a place to put all the refuse of the farm—for her to turn it into pure, wholesome milk and butter, which made red spots on the cheeks of the farmer's children.

The foregoing ideas of the importance of the cow prevailed until about four years ago, since when they have been modified greatly by commercializing her products.

The growth of the dairy business in Crittenden county for the past three years is remarkable. Mr. Jim Aleck Hill broke the ice and shipped the first can of cream out of the county. Since that time it has become a considerable industry. There are about 400 cows in the county from which butterfat is sold.

Robert Bird has a fine bunch of 26 cows and a pure bred jersey bull; Mr. Glad Threlkeld has 35 cows and a pure bred Jersey bull, the great grandson of "The Noble of Oaklands," which sold for $15,000; and Mr. Paul Paris has 20 Holstein cows and a pure bred Jersey bull. These three men have modern barns and are prepared to handle dairy products on a commercial basis.

Mr. Walter Wheeler, the licensed cream tester who operates the local station at R. F. Wheeler's grocery computes the following statistics:

Since June 1919 this station has shipped 31,855 pounds of cream which contained 12,565 pounds of butter fat. For this cream the producers have realized the tidy sum of $7,256.22. This means that this one station is shipping nearly one thousand dollars worth of cream every month—or averages so at least.

It can readily be seen that dairying is a most profitable business, not only bringing in real money but the greatest agency known for the upbuilding of Crittenden's soil.

SCHOOL'S PAGEANT BIG SUCCESS

The "evening with Uncle Sam," a patriotic pageant presented by Marion Graded and High School on Monday evening February 23 was in every way a great success. It provided the school and community a very appropriate Washington birthday celebration. We can not do too much to keep the noble sentiment of patriotism glowing in our hearts. The war has done much to arouse to vigorous expression our latent spirit of devotion to our country we must not permit our feeling of loyalty to our country to relax, but must seek to keep alive those feelings by giving them inspiring expression. This the Pageant did. The School and community joined in expression of patriotism.

The crowd was the largest at a school entertainment here. There were about five hundred present at the entertainment.

A wonderful organization made the pageant the success it was. Mrs. J. H. Moore directed the training of the large cast of sixty five, assisted by Miss Jane Thompson who was the committee on costumes. The excellent work of the cast attested to their ability in this kind of work.

No entertainment of the School would be a success without the Orchestra, which furnished music for the occasion.

The programs, tickets, tags and posters were printed in the Marionite shop by the boys.

The gross door receipts were about $200.00. The net proceeds will be used for school needs.

NELLIE CRAYNE HUNT

Nellie Josephine Crayne, daughter of Joseph and Pernicia Crayne, was born at Marion, Ky., November 29, 1881, and passed away from this life at Phillipsburg, Kans., February 2, 1920, aged 38 years, 2 months and 3 days. On April 5, 1903 she was married to James Edward Hunt of Marion, Ky. To this union three children were born, Izella, Stella and Ruby, who with the father survive her. In 1914 the family moved to Kansas, locating at Phillipsburg, where the home has been since that time. She also leaves to mourn her loss, her father J. A. Crayne of Marion, Ky., four sisters and two brothers residing in Kentucky and two sisters Mrs. L. L. Hunt and Mrs. Schuyler Jacobs of Phillipsburg, besides many other relatives, friends and neighbors. She was a faithful wife, a loving sacrificing mother and a kind neighbor. She was willing to go and said at the last that she was leaning on Jesus. We will miss her in the home, but rejoice in the memory and influence of her life.

Short services were conducted at the home by Rev. L. A. Kerr and the remains laid to rest in Fairview cemetery Wednesday afternoon.

"Precious mother, thou hast left us
Left us, yes for evermore;
But we hope to meet our loved ones
On that bright and happy shore.

But oh a brighter home than ours
In Heaven, is now her home.

Our Schools

By Prof. V. L. Christian

The most serious phase of the crisis confronting public schools is the problem of securing adequately trained and competent teachers with salaries that can be paid from the insufficient school revenues.

Why have the people been so negligent with their teachers, the ones who have given most in devoted service and received least in compensation and appreciation? If the teachers had been adequately paid before the stress of war conditions came many of them would have enough savings to tide them over until the readjustment to the conditions of the present excessively high prices of necessities. But since teachers have been paid barely a mere living wage they have no savings and many good teachers who expected to devote their lives to teaching are being forced to leave the profession and seek other kinds of work in order to make a living.

To show how acute the teacher problem is I quote from an editorial of the New York American:

"Secretary Lane did not overstate when he recently wrote: 'The public school is the strongest weapon we possess against the enemies of liberty.'"

"It is stronger than prisons, stronger than sedition laws, stronger than deportations, for it prevents abuses of freedom. Prevention is always better and usually cheaper than trying to cure."

"Yet last year 143,000 school teachers resigned to go into better paid work. They were starved out of the most useful work that men and women can do. The Financial Chronicle says that 1,000 rural communities in New York State have been forced to close their schools because of a lack of teachers. It places the shortage at $500 in this state alone. In West Virginia more than 400 schools have closed for the same reason. No such dearth of teachers as now exists has been known since our public school system was founded. Bear in mind what it means."

"Our mode of living tends to cause us to expect and demand more of the school. But the school is the teacher, not the building. Overload, underpay the teacher and the school fails. Its shortcoming is at the expense of the next generation. No institution can be expected to give good service when in one year 143,000 of its expert workers are crowded out by penury."

"These figures ought to make every level American think deeply. THEY ARE INFINITELY MORE OMINOUS THAN THE ACTIVITIES OF THE SO-CALLED 'RED' OF WHICH SO MUCH IS MADE. Neglect the public school and in a few years we will have a crop of citizens who will be easily susceptible to revolutionary promptings. Without knowledge successful democracy is impossible. The teacher is the true defender of the Republic."

"Work so supremely important must be paid an adequate wage. Most teachers now get less pay than the motormen or guards operating the trains that take them to school. The railway men are not overpaid; the teachers are all underpaid. It is, as some one said, a question whether it is not as important to train the mind as it is to mind the train."

"Teachers are not greedy or exorbitant in their demands for more money. Their fault has been that they have not asked enough for the good of the schools. Nor do teachers think that high salaries will make good teachers out of poor ones. They know very well what is required to become a successful teacher. They realize that unless one becomes a teacher because he loves the work better than any other, because he feels the work suits him better and he is better suited to the work than any other and because he desires to practice his delicate art of impartation in devoted service to mankind, he should never try to teach."

Teachers know, too, that teaching is a missionary enterprise and that teachers will never be paid salaries commensurate with the value of their service. But for the success of their work they must demand higher salaries. Teachers cannot do effective work if they are constantly worried about money matters. To preserve his highest efficiency a teacher from time to time should attend normal school, college and university; be able to escape from the work of the school room, move about in other fields and accept the fervent interests of mankind as his own; and provide himself with a variety of good books and have recreation and society, all in the interest of highest efficiency. Whatever benefits accrue to a teacher from these will be poured out as enrichment in the lives of his pupils. But all of these require money.

There is a dignity that teachers must maintain in their communities and before their pupils. This dignity may be damaged if teachers appear on the streets and before their pupils in shabby clothes. No one will deny that clothes cost money. And this is all in addition to the investment in original preparation and the cost of the bare necessities of food, fuel and shelter.

When the people fully realize that the salaries they are paying teachers are uneconomical and that teachers are not being treated in a way to get the best service from them they will arise and demand fairer treatment for the teachers of their children.

V. L. CHRISTIAN.

Today Limerick is famous chiefly for humor and pretty girls. The natives claim the very prettiest Irish girls grow up in Limerick. ## CONDITIONS DO NOT SUIT THE FARMERS

PRESIDENT NATIONAL FARMERS' UNION DECLARES THEY ARE NOT CONTENT.

FAIL TO GET FAIR PROFITS

There Is Too Wide a Spread Between the Price Received by Farmer and That Paid by the Consumer.

Washington.—"Back of every basic commodity exist movements which should give the country gravest concern," Victor Murdock, chairman of the federal trade commission told the annual conference of the national board of farm organizations.

Explaining to the delegates representing more than 30 agricultural bodies the work of the federal trade commission, Mr. Murdock said it was the "economic eye" of the government to ascertain the facts regarding these movements in order that the public might be protected. The work of the commission in the past has been "almost elementary," said Mr. Murdock, adding that the commission was about to embark on the study of "other and graver problems" affecting the nation's business.

Charles S. Barrett, president of the National Farmers' Union, who presided as chairman of the conference, said that while it would be very pleasant to be able to say that "all is well with agriculture and that in the farmer's mind there is no discontent, nothing left to be desired," but the facts were that "the farmer is not content or satisfied."

Answers to the recent questionnaire sent out by the Postoffice Department he said came nearer to revealing the truth about agriculture than anything that has received equal publicity in the city press.

"The replies of the farmers," said Mr. Barrett, "reveal deep dissatisfaction with the treatment that has been accorded agriculture and resentment at the wide spread of prices received by the farmer and those paid by consumers, a feeling of insecurity in the ability of farmers to continue in the same extent of production of food and inability to secure sufficient labor or to hold even the farm boys and girls on the farms in competition with the luring scale of wages offered in industry and commerce off the farms. The farmers and their wives in answering these questionnaires faithfully reflected both a condition and a state of mind which do not speak well for the future, either of agriculture or the enduring prosperity of the nation."

"The farmers, at least the organized farmers, from now on, will pool their efforts in exploring what in the past has been forbidden ground."

They couldn't be built now for twice $71,000

When the talk turns from politics to railroads, and the traveler with the cocksure air breaks in with, "There's an awful lot of 'water' in the railroads," here are some hard-pan facts to give him:

American railroads have cost $80,900 a mile—roadbed, structures, stations, yards, terminals, freight and passenger trains—everything from the great city terminals to the last spike.

A good concrete-and-asphalt highway costs $36,000 a mile—just a bare road, not counting the cost of culverts, bridges, etc.

Our railroads couldn't be duplicated today for $150,000 a mile.

They are capitalized for only $71,000 a mile—much less than their actual value. Seventy-one thousand dollars today will buy one locomotive.

English railways are capitalized at $274,000 a mile; the French at $155,000; German $132,000; even in Canada (still in pioneer development) they are capitalized at $67,000 a mile. The average for all foreign countries is $100,000.

Low capitalization and high operating efficiency have enabled American Railroads to pay the highest wages while charging the lowest rates.

EAT LESS AND TAKE
SALTS FOR KIDNEYS

Take a Glass of Salts if Your Back Hurts or Bladder Bothers.

The American men and women must guard constantly against kidney trouble, because we eat too much and all our food is rich. Our blood is filled with uric acid which the kidneys strive to filter out, they weaken from overwork, become sluggish; the eliminative troubles clog and the result is kidney trouble, bladder weakness and a general decline in health.

When your kidneys feel like lumps of lead, your back hurts or the urine is cloudy, full of sediment or you are obliged to seek relief two or three times during the night; if you suffer with sick headache or dizzy, nervous spells, acid stomach, or you have rheumatism when the weather is bad, get from your pharmacist about four ounces of Jad Salts; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys will then act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for generations to flush and stimulate clogged kidneys; to neutralize the acids in the urine so it no longer is a source of irritation, thus ending bladder disorders.

Jad Salts is inexpensive; cannot injure, makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water beverage, and belongs in every home, because nobody can make a mistake by having a good kidney flushing any time.—Adv.

CHAPTER XIV—Continued.

"I'll do it," said Brousseau. "I meant to. And now—"

He rose to embrace her, but she stepped away from him. "Not until we are married, Edouard," she said.

Brousseau winced now. "It almost looks as if you didn't love me," he muttered in disgust. And in that sentence the major part of his character might have been epitomized.

Two days after the news reached Hilary he went into the village for his mail. Taking it to his office to read, he found among it a bulky envelope addressed to him from Ontario in an unknown writing. He opened it and found a letter from Morris.

However evasive the ex-manager had been in conversation, he was direct enough in writing. "You didn't treat me well, and I guess you had reason to act as you did," he wrote. "That bound Brousseau swindled me as he was swindling you, and I'm going to put you in possession of the facts and documents, which I took from his desk before leaving. You needn't have any scruples about using them, because they refer principally to you."

Hilary thought enough of the matter to send a man to Lafa, asking him to come in immediately; and that afternoon the two men went over the situation together.

"It's a clear case," said Hilary. "He's been swindling the property right and left. It seems. I allowed for a few thousands, but as I make it out it amounts to nearly eighty thousand." Lafa whistled and took up the paper that Hilary handed him.

"This is the contract with Leblanc to cut on the St. Boniface limits," he said. "So there's no mistaking who owned that lumber in the river." He took up another document. "A contract with the Cornwall Paper company to supply twenty thousand cords of spruce wood from the St. Boniface limits," he said. "And here's Morris' receipt for seven thousand cords of the same paper."

"Here's another document that makes interesting reading," continued Hilary, handing it to him. Lafa studied it. "I don't get it," he said.

"It's Lamartine's acknowledgment of fifty thousand dollars received from Rosny for fifty shares in the North Empire Development company—one of Brousseau's interests. Now look at this one. Lamartine is remitting five thousand dollars less the broker's charges for the sale of North Empire Development stock, as per order. He doesn't say how much stock. Lamartine isn't a fool. But here's Rosny's acknowledgment of the five thousand dollars less broker's charges for the sale of fifty shares, dated March 9, 1913. Now here's a stock market clipping from a newspaper of March 4, showing the stock at $875."

"That's where we've got him, Lafa. Lamartine's letter proves nothing, but Morris got hold of Rosny's acknowledgment, probably for blackmailing purposes, and it shows Brousseau has swindled Rosny out of $37,000 on that deal. Probably there were others. That's where his money went."

"It's a pity Morris couldn't run straight, being as thorough as he is," said Lafa. Hilary looked at him searchingly until he compelled him to return his gaze.

"You have been very reticent of late, Lafa. What's the trouble?" "I guess it ain't much," said Connell. "Well, you see, it's this way," he went on reluctantly. "I knew what lies that blackguard was spreading about you. And I didn't know whether to tell you or not, Mr. Askew. I knew Rosny saw us with that girl in Ste. Marie, and I knew from his face that he wasn't pleased. And again I didn't know what to do. And I decided to lie low. It's my way; maybe I was wrong, but I'm against butting in, by nature."

"Never mind, Lafa," said Hilary. "It's too late to make any difference now." "No, it ain't too late," shouted Lafa, leaping to his feet. "Mr. Askew, you haven't told him—Mr. Rosny—about that asbestos mine, have you? You ought to have gone to him and let him know. You could have saved Mamzelle Rosny from sacrificing herself this way. You can save her, and you're going to."

"I suppose I have let things drift," said Hilary somberly. "I lived in a sort of hope that the mess would clear up. And I hadn't the heart to do anything at all."

"There's the girl Marie—won't she say anything?" "She's afraid of her father. There's no telling how he would take it. At present I don't think he knows anything."

"I wouldn't let that stand in my way," said Lafa emphatically. "I don't think you'd really use that means of clearing yourself, if you were I. Lafa, and, besides that, she has my promise to say nothing, and that settles the matter. No, Lafa, you're talking nonsense."

"Maybe I am," said Lafa stubbornly. "But I ain't going to see your happiness wrecked because two women haven't the sense and the heart to clear you. And I'm going to do it."

"No, you're not, Lafa," said Hilary bluntly. "Why not? Good Lord, why not?" "Because I'm leaving St. Boniface," answered Hilary. "Mr. Askew?" "I'm going," repeated Hilary, with a swift gesture of hopelessness. "You'll call me a quitter, I suppose."

"I certainly should," answered Lafa coolly. "The same as you did me."

"Maybe. But I came up here to play a certain game. I came to put the seigniorial lumber business on its legs. And I've done it. I stayed to fight Brousseau after he nearly got me down, and I've beaten him. I've won that game on every point. I'm going to make Brousseau refund his stollings and I'm going to leave you here in charge for the present, to wind up. I shall go to Quebec to start proceedings and try to find a purchaser. Your contract will hold as long as you want it to. And I'm not coming back. I've done what I came for, haven't I?" he ended defiantly.

"That's the way all quitters talk," said Lafa. Hilary's nerves were gone, of course. Lafa knew that the last lap of the race was the grueling one. Hilary needed help, that was all. Lafa grew crafty with his lies.

"Well, you're boss, of course," he said reluctantly. "If you've made up your mind, it ain't for me to interfere. When are you leaving, air?" "I shall go out with Dupont when he takes his last load," answered Hilary. "That'll be Friday. We can't have the logs through the mill before then. Dupont doesn't know yet?"

"No." Lafa reflected. The weather had changed suddenly during the preceding night. Already the shores of the St. Lawrence were thick with grinding floes. The middle passage was clear, but in a few days navigation would be impossible; a dog team would have to be procured and trained to run together. Already it was a difficult journey with a horse-sleigh between the camp and the mill. If the weather held, Hilary could be held until he, Lafa, had accomplished his purpose.

Hilary put on his hat and overcoat, picked up his snowshoes and went toward the stables. In a few minutes the horse had been harnessed to the sleigh and stood breathing great clouds of smoke into the frosty air. It started, and from the office doorway Lafa watched the man whom he loved best in the world of men driving away.

He waited till the sleigh had disappeared among the trees behind the bridge. He allowed ten minutes more, to make sure that Hilary would not change his intentions and return. Then he coolly opened Hilary's desk with a duplicate key that had been made after the burglary and took out the envelope that contained the papers from Morris. He removed these and thrust them into his pocket. In the empty envelope he placed some discarded letters from the waste-basket. Then he put back the envelope, closed the desk, strapped on his snowshoes and left the office.

Five minutes after he left Hilary was back. His decision had suddenly come to him. He had resolved to leave St. Boniface, and there was nothing to be gained by procrastination. He wanted to leave St. Boniface forever, and to put the memory of the past months out of his mind, so far as it could be possible. He hated the little village; even Lafa's presence had become intolerable to him.

He went to Dupont on board his schooner and arranged for him to sail for Quebec the following evening with the little long-one schooner full—which he had. He instructed him to say nothing to anybody about the arrangement. He saw nothing strange in Dupont's manner or aspect and, had he done so, he would not have thought anything about it.

But, seeing that the office was dark and unoccupied, he stepped there on his way, opened his desk and took out the envelope which he supposed to contain the letter and paper from Morris. In Quebec he meant to go through them again, mailing to Rosny those papers that had reference to his affairs and placing the others in a lawyer's hands for a civil suit.

He packed a few of his personal effects in a bag and left the office, as he supposed for the last time.

CHAPTER XV.

Lafa Takes a Hand.

Lafa was surprised to feel the bitter tang of the air when he left the mill office. It was going to be winter now, he reflected, and, if Hilary could be held only three days, there could be no question of an immediate journey to Quebec.

Reaching the waste of open ground before the Chateau, he saw that a sleigh had been there that day; possibly it was in the stables now. He rang the bell, nodded to Robitaille, who opened the door, disregarded his incomprehensible address, which seemed to negative Lafa's wish to enter, and went by instinct into the living room at the end of the hall for the first time in his life.

He tapped at the door, but there came no answer. He knocked more loudly, and went in without waiting for any. He discovered the Seignieur in a big leather chair before the huge, glowing fire. Madeleine standing beside him and Edouard Brousseau a short distance away. There was an atmosphere of immediate constraint, as if Lafa's appearance had interrupted a tense interview. Lafa sensed it, but he did not care. He could hardly believe his luck. He had wanted Brousseau there badly, but he had not hoped to meet him.

Brousseau was the first to speak. He may have guessed the nature of Lafa's errand from Lafa's attitude, though not its fullness. He scowled. "It's the man from the mill," he said in a sneering tone to Monsieur Rosny.

"He's drunk or dreaming," muttered Brousseau, trembling. "A few strands of rock flax, commercially worthless—"

"But that ain't roguery. That's just a business trick," said Connell. "How did he get you into his power, Mr. Rosny, asking your pardon? I'll tell you. He's cheated you as he's cheated us, except that it was worse, because you trusted him, which we never did. That's what I came to tell you, Mr. Rosny. He's swindled you out of nearly forty thousand dollars on one deal, in North Empire Development company stock, and maybe in other—"

Brousseau leaped at Lafa like a tiger. Lafa, who had anticipated the move, stepped dexterously aside, at the same time twisting the chair on which his hand was resting. Brousseau, in his plunge forward, tripped over it, stumbled and fell prone to the floor.

"And I got the papers to prove that—here!" said Lafa triumphantly. Brousseau rose, rubbing his shins and muttering curses, and glared savagely about him. Madeleine was breathing quickly, her eyes fixed intently on Lafa's face.

"It's a d—d lie!" cried Brousseau. "They've forged those papers. Where are they? Eh? Show me!" "He said he was speaking for you, Mr. Rosny," said Lafa. "So here they are. I guess you know your signature?"

He drew the envelope from his pocket and placed the three documents on the Seignieur's knee, standing between him and Brousseau, who looked ready to leap again. But he did not leap; he muttered to Madeleine, who still watched Lafa breathlessly.

"I guess these letters don't tell you much, Mr. Rosny," continued Lafa. "If you'll put them together you'll see that these fifty thousand-dollar shares were sold for you in Quebec at a hundred dollars apiece."

"Yes, Monsieur Brousseau had ill fortune with that company. He explained it to me," said the Seignieur, trembling. "What of it?" "Why, here's the market price of its shares five days before at $875, that's all," said Lafa. "It didn't tumble that fast. All the country would have been ringing with it if it had done that. I guess Brousseau has that money of yours tucked away safely somewhere."

"You gave me your power of attorney—" Brousseau began. But his guilt was written on his face. The swiftness of the blow had utterly disconcerted him and made him incapable of defense. Lafa saw the Seignieur's expression change as if a mask had been torn from his features. He staggered to his feet, his left side helpless, and, grasping the chair with his right hand, confronted Brousseau.

"What have you to say? Is it true or false, monsieur?" he cried. "Where are my other stocks? You had a hundred thousand of my money. Where is it?" "Find it!" yelled Brousseau. "Go to the devil with your money! I tried to help you out of friendship. I haven't time to work out your stock exchange accounts for it. If anybody's cheated you it's the stockbroker. Go to him for it!" He started toward Madeleine. "You don't believe these lies against me!" he cried.

"You have insulted my father, but you have not answered him."

"It's true, then, is it true?" "Yep, it's true," interposed Lafa. "It can't be anything else. Everybody knows what a rotten swindler the fellow is. Ah, keep your hand down, Mr. Rosny. I'm telling you what I think of him. That's what I came here for. And if you'll excuse me for referring to your mortgage, which everybody knows, if he doesn't turn that in to you by tomorrow Mr. Askew will sue him criminally as well as civilly for what he's done to us, because we've got the confession of the man that saw the boom for him."

Brousseau swung on his heel suddenly and strode toward the door. He turned and shook his fist at Lafa. "I'll pay you for this, and that other blackmail!" he swore. "I'll smash your rotten concern!"

He broke off with a derisive snort and made toward the entrance. But Lafa strode past him and blocked his way.

"Just a moment," he said. "Mr. Rosny's got something to say to you."

Brousseau tried to fling himself past, but Lafa, standing like an iron sentinel, completely filled the opening.

"Monsieur Brousseau," said the Seignieur, "there are just a few words to say before you go. When Monsieur Connell came here he did not meet with encouragement. He proved his case, and you have proved it by your actions. When you were a boy I advanced you, I interested myself in you. You climbed high, and you tried to repay me by ousting me from my lands and stepping into my shoes. You sought to dishonor me through my daughter, who was wiser than I in her recognition of what you were. I thought that you were only ill-bred, but you have proved yourself a scoundrel as well. You will repay me everything you have stolen or go to jail. Good-day, monsieur."

"That's all, I guess," said Lafa, and opened the door.

Brousseau dashed through and along the corridor. Lafa followed him at an interval; but Brousseau did not wait for him. He pulled the front door open and slammed it behind him. When Lafa reached it Brousseau was already dragging his horse, already harnessed to his sleigh, out of the stables.

Lafa watched him drive away and turned back into the hall. He hesitated to return into the room, but as he stopped uncertainly in the corridor behind the entrance Madeleine came toward him.

"My father thanks you, Mr. Connell," she said, and though the tears rained down her face she smiled. "It is like the lifting of a nightmare," she whispered.

"Yes, mademoiselle," said Lafa. "But it was you I wanted chiefly to see."

"You saw me. What else is there to say?" Mr. Connell, if you have come here on any other mission it is hopeless. Why did you let him send you for—?" she continued, reading his face.

"Because he's my friend," said Lafa. "But he didn't send me here. He's talking of going away. That's why I came."

He saw her start, then control herself.

"I'm forty years old," said Lafa, and conscious of the ineptness of the beginning hesitated. "I'm forty years old," he continued. "Not old enough to be your father, mademoiselle, but old enough to be a sort of uncle, though I ain't got your education. That don't matter. It's experience that counts, and knowledge of the world. And I seen a good bit more of life than you, mademoiselle."

"I seen enough to learn one thing, and that is that misunderstandings are the cause of nearly all the trouble in the world. When Mr. Askew came here I wasn't altogether too much pleased. I'd been meshed into the crooked work that Morris and Monsieur Brousseau was doing with the seigniorial lumber. Then when I got to know Hilary Askew I saw that he was clean straight through."

He let his hand fall lightly on the girl's shoulder. The gesture, which might have been an offense in some, was instinctive, and, like most instinctive actions, fitting. Lafa, unthought, unlettered, standing before Madeleine Rosny, seemed like a benevolent guardian.

"When he came to like you I was glad," continued Lafa. "But when you came to like him I was just about as happy as when I was leading Clarence—my wife. I mean—out of the First Methodist church at Shoburport, Mass., on August 17, 1902, with her white veil hiding her, and these orange flowers she was carrying scenting up the place. . . not quite so glad, maybe, but not far shy of it. And you think he wasn't true to you? What man in his senses wouldn't be?"

"I won't hear you," cried the girl, summoning her defiance to her aid. "He should have spoken for himself. What right have you to speak for him, sent or unsent?"

"Why, I thought I'd explain that, mamzelle. Just because I'm his friend," said Lafa. "It ain't true. Not a word of that story's true. I'm going to tell you the truth. But first I'm going to say what I got to say, because it's true. You haven't acted rightly toward him—no, you haven't, mamzelle!"

The passionate gesture, the sincerity of his tone dominated her. She tried to find her voice and could not; she tried to find indignation and could not.

"We went to Ste. Marie together to see conditions there, to see what sort of place Simon Duval was running. The girl was there. It was the night of the raid, and we helped her away. She got home, and her father never knew. Little Baptiste knew, and others who'd seen her with us. They told Brousseau, and he started those lies about Mr. Askew, who never knew about it—never knew anything."

"That fellow Pierre, Brousseau's man, had his eye on the girl. You know the sort of work he's done along this coast. Maybe you don't, but it's devil's work, mamzelle, and he and Leblanc lured Marie into a boat by means of their decoy, Nanette Bonnat, and took her to the island. We found them there, and saved her, and brought the girls back. That's all. Now you know. Now you understand how you've done Hilary a wrong. If you don't believe me," Lafa continued doggedly, "just tell me how much you don't believe, and I'll prove it. I'll prove every word; you don't have to take me on trust."

"Do you think I am capable of seeking evidence that a man is true to me?" cried Madeleine. "Do you think I am going into St. Boniface to pry into your friend's actions?"

"You love him, mamzelle," said Lafa, with patience that would not be thwarted. "I can read that in your face. You love him, and you've done him a wrong. Well, mamzelle, you can't lie down under that. You can't bear it. You've got to right it."

She burst into helpless tears. "I hoped that he would come to me," she whispered.

"Hilary Askew ain't that kind of a man," said Lafa. "He refused to defend himself."

"He'd promised Marie to say nothing."

"Let me pass. I have heard you."

But Lafa stood in the way. "You're going to tell him it's all right," he said. "I'll arrange it so it won't hurt your pride, if that's your keeping—"

"How dare you insult me? Let him come and plead!"

"Mamzelle!"

"I shall never go to him!"

"And Lafa had reached the end. His outraged justice had led him to the goal; but it was the wrong goal. He was helpless, he was beaten. He stepped aside, and she ran past him hurrying up the stairs, whose faded carpet was held by tarnished rods that gleamed between her moving feet."

Lafa looked along the gloomy hall at the portraits in their gilt frames and he felt the unreasonable, stubborn Rosny spirit that looked out of the eyes of each, as it had looked out of Madeleine's and spoken by her. And it had met such another spirit in Hilary.

"I guess you're wrong, all of you," Lafa muttered. "I guess you mania factored your code and thought it was breeding and pride, and you can't help it. You got your foundations crooked. You can't help it; that's all."

And with the same dogged patience but with an added air of hopelessness he put on his snowshoes and plodded from the Chateau.

Marion's School Problem

Right now Marion has almost, if not greater problem on hand than the problem of electricity or candles.

This problem is not a one cylinder affair either. The school is over crowded... the play ground is not large enough the high school has no business in the same building with the grades at all... and so on.

But these aren't the only deficiencies that can and must be remedied. Marion must have a non teaching superintendent. It is an absolute impossibility for any one man to teach five or six periods each day and have time enough left to properly supervise the school.

The Press is informed that this very handicap obtains in the school at this time.

A school superintendent to keep his school working at the highest point of efficiency must have time to plan, and put his plans into execution, to supervise his teachers in such a way that he knows his teachers are properly performing their work.

All these things are an impossibility if the superintendent must spend the entire day in the class room. It makes no difference to The Press whether the present superintendent should become the non teaching superintendent or not. So far he has not been able because of lack of opportunity to demonstrate whether he had unusual ability along these lines or not. However it is nothing but fair to say that Prof. Christian's ability as a teacher is unquestioned. Even his strongest critics concede that.

Mrs. Wilms, Freed of Troubles Endured Since Childhood, Lauds Trutona.

LOUISVILLE, Ky., Feb. 26. "If every preparation advertised as a remedy were as honest in purpose and practice as Trutona, feel confident there would either be fewer medicines or a lesser number of sick people," Mrs. W. Wims, a well known Louisville woman of 325 North Adams street said recently.

"I have suffered from stomach trouble since childhood," she continued. "Since last July I've been able to rest only three or four nights out of a week. The others I passed sitting in a chair. Contracted muscles caused me terrible pain. I had no appetite and at times couldn't eat a thing for two or three days. I was nervous and so weak I could hardly get around. My terrible suffering finally caused a brief spell of insanity."

I have finished my fourth bottle of this excellent preparation, Trutona, and I no longer experience the terrible pains and can enjoy a good night's rest once again. My nervousness is almost entirely relieved and for the first time in a year I'm able to do my own housework. I have a fine appetite now, eat everything without the least bit of trouble afterward. Knowing what Trutona has done for me I can not recommend it too highly."

Trutona is now being introduced and explained in Marion at J. H. Orme's Drug Store. Ad

Clifford Deboe and George Kavanaugh.

We were sorry indeed to hear of the death—and especially the tragic ending—of our venerable friend David Woods, whom we have very intimately known since our childhood days.

Our old time friend, Mrs. Ida Nunn, wife of Dr. W. H. Nunn, was among the Blackfords last week visiting the families of Rev. J. R. King and C. E. McGregor.

We observed in a recent issue of The Crittenden Press a letter from Mrs. S. E. Gray, a former Crittenden countyite but now of Morehouse, Mo. We infer from the ring of her epistle that she yet entertains fond recollections of old Crittenden. Your pencil pusher remembers the good lady when she was known as Miss Ellen Smith.

Owing to the fact that la-grippe, influenza, "flu" or whatever name it may be called, being so prevalent in various parts of the country, quite a number of people are taking the prophylactic vaccination against the complicating pneumonia.

The revival meeting at the Methodist church which continued for a number of days and nights closed last Thursday night. The pastor, Rev. V. L. Stone, was assisted by Rev. Robert Lear.

A number of our enterprising farmers of the nearby country are burning plant beds and making other preparations for another crop. You cannot keep a working man down.

AGRICULTURAL COLUMN

Every large industrial or commercial enterprise is dependent on its by products for profit.

Manure is the by product of the farm and when a farmer begins to pay little attention to its care and use he begins to fail in his chosen work. The profit in stock feeding often lies solely in the manure produced. Why not care for and use the manure to the best advantage?

The following article was prepared by three members of the soil fertility class in our High school. Those members are Watts Franklin, William Eskew, and Raymond Boucher.

There is two billion tons of manure produced in the United States annually worth three dollars per ton, which would be six billion dollars if it were all saved. But due to the way it is handled one half of its value is lost, which means the loss of three billion dollars each year. We Americans are a wasteful people as this big loss of plant food, due to poor care and use of farm manure goes to show.

The amount of manure produced on the farm depends upon the kind of animals and also the kinds of feed. The average horse produces about 11 tons, the cow about 13 tons, sheep 1.2 tons and the hog about two tons annually. This means if on your farm you had five horses, six head of cattle and 12 hogs, the value of the manure would be $450.

The value of the manure is both in the liquid and solid excrements. Nitrogen is contained one half in solid excrements and one half in the liquid; phosphorus, practically all in the solid; and potassium, two thirds in solid and three fifths in the liquid. In a general way the plant food of the manure is about one half in the liquid and one half in the solid excrements.

Manure not only adds these essential elements which are often lacking in the soil, but furnishes and abundance of humus.

The loss in value in farm manure comes about in a number of ways. Usually the largest loss comes through not saving the liquid manure, either through not using enough bedding to absorb it or else even more by throwing the manure out into the barnyard and exposing it to the rain. The manure exposed in this way soon loses the larger part of its value.

The changes brought about in the manure are due mainly to the heating and bleaching.

Have you not noticed the peculiar odor prevalent about horse stables in warm weather? This odor sometimes comes fairly stifling when one forks a manure pile open. It is due to the escaping of ammonia. This is the form of gas containing a large amount of nitrogen, which cannot be recovered when lost in this manner. It has been found that two tons of horse manure exposed in the open barn lot for six months was reduced to less than one ton. Even when not exposed to rains but simply thrown out loose under a shed there is considerable loss in the manure.

The Maryland Experiment Station allowed 80 tons of manure to lie in an uncovered pile exposed to the weather for one year, during which time the amount was reduced to 27 tons. From these examples you can see how important it is to protect manure from the weather.

The factors influencing the value of manure are as follows. 1st. Food of the animals, 2nd. Age of the animal, 3rd. The kind of animal, 4th. Care of the manure.

The manure from an old mature animal is a little more valuable than that from young growing animals, since the young animals withdraw more of the plant food for permanent use in their bodies.

The kind of food is the greatest factor influencing its value. Manure made when rich feeds are given are much more valuable than that from animals being fed mainly on roughages. The manure from chickens and sheep is more concentrated in plant food contents than that from other animals because it is drier than other manure and these animals do not retain quite so much of the plant food as is retained by the horse or cow. The loss due to improper care is the greatest and least excusable. Our next article will be on the care of manure.

I own 135 acres of land near Marion all in grass at present except what was cultivated last year. My plan is as follows: plow grass land this spring, plant in corn using acid phosphate. After the corn is cut, the land is seeded to rye and pastured in the early spring after which the stock is removed and a growth of rye turned under. I apply acid phosphate for the rye. I follow this with cow peas to which I add phosphate and cut the peas for hay. I seed to grass again and repeat the rotation. What do you think of this method of improving my land? How can I kill persimmon bushes? Can I use enough acid phosphate to injure my land? J. W. S.

1. I am glad that you are practicing rotation and using a cover crop for green manure. If you feed all your feed on the farm and religiously care for and return all the manure made I believe you will be able to improve your yield some for I suspect they have not been large. I suggest that you lime a few acres each year and substitute red clover for your grass. This will give you two legumes for hay and pasture, besides furnishing a more valuable feed it would improve your soil much sooner. If you would grow a crop of sweet clover for pasture or green manure you would get most satisfactory results.

2. Persimmon bushes are a tough proposition but if you keep cutting at them you will finally get them. Pasture them with cattle or sheep then plow deep enough to turn up the roots.

IF You come here
to eat the next time you are in Marion you will know why your neighbor comes here for his dinner when he comes to Marion.

Givens Restaurant

3. Excessive use of acid phosphate tends to cause an acid ber of years. Test your soil but two hundred pound and if it is sour use lime at applications each year would the rate of two tons per acre.

Where Can I Find Relief From Itching, Terrifying Eczema?

Question on Lips of Afflicted.
There is a harrassing discomfort caused by Eczema that almost becomes a torture. The itching is almost unbearable, and the skin seems on fire with the burning irritation. A cure from local applications of salves and ointments is impossible, because such treatment can only aggravate the pain temporarily. The disease can only be reached by going deep down to its source, which is in the blood, the disease being caused by an infection which breaks out through the skin. That is why the most satisfactory treatment for all so-called skin diseases is S. S. S., which acts by cleansing the blood. Get a bottle today, and you will see results from the right treatment. ## HUN TRIAL TO BE HELD IN GERMANY

ALLIES WILL LEAVE PUNISHMENT OF THE GUILTY TO THEIR OWN PEOPLE.

BERLIN MUST PLAY FAIR

Failure to Punish Those Who Deserve
Punishment Will Again Throw
Germany Up Against Extradition Crisis.

London.—Germany will be allowed to try the alleged war criminals herself.

In a note to Berlin the allied powers promise to refrain from any intervention, but emphasize that they leave to the German government entire responsibility for the trial of all German nationals named in the list recently sent to Berlin.

The note declares, in effect, that the allies reserve the right to judge whether justice has been meted out, and the further right to seize for trial before allied tribunals such men whom they do not consider to have been properly judged by the German court. The note announces that an allied commission will be formed for the purpose of collecting and communicating to the German government the details of all charges against the alleged war criminals.

The reply to Holland on the refusal to extradite the former Emperor Wilhelm is also published. The powers inform the queen's government that they hope William of Hohenzollern will not be delivered to the allies for trial, but intimate that if Holland will intern the fugitive in some remote place, where he will no longer be a menace to the peace of Europe, the issue will be satisfactorily terminated.

TO DECREASE ARMAMENTS

Parliament of Holland Holds Decided Views as to Operation of the Peace League.

The Hague.—Decreased armaments, speedy institution of a permanent high court of justice and immediate admission of all civilized nations desiring to enter, were demands attached to the resolution passed by the second chamber of the Dutch parliament approving Holland's entrance into the league of nations.

During the debate it was explained that these demands did not constitute reservations, as reservations were not permitted, but were suggestions that the Dutch government would enter with the idea of having these principles adopted.

"EXECUTED" HIS DEAD BODY

Stern Decree of Justice Carried Out on Corpses of Ancient Dalmatian
Archbishop.

Dalmatia has made rapid strides in science and literature the story of her culture, however, being one of personal achievement rather than public advancement. Zara, its largest city, for example, had no printing press until 1708, while Venetian Dalmatia had only one public school in the eighteenth century.

Roger Joseph Bosovich, one famous son of Dalmatia, was esteemed by scientists for his work setting forth a new atomic theory, but more popularly known because of the adoption of his plan for assuring the uprightness of the dome of St. Peter's at Rome when a crack was discovered in it. He wrote verse voluminously, but not as successfully as he wrote his numerous scientific treatises.

Marco Antonio de Doninis, another Dalmatian of public note, mingled theology and natural philosophy with serious consequences to himself. He set forth the first correct explanation of the rainbow, but his theological career was less fruitful. As archbishop of Spalato he attacked his superiors in his writings, fled to England, returned to Rome, then died penance by writing a book refuting his heretical works. He was tried, but died before the trial ended. The trial went on and he was sentenced to be dragged through the streets of Rome and buried publicly. His body was removed from his coffin and the sentence executed.

THE "BLUES" Caused by Acid-Stomach

Millions of people who worry, are depressed, have spells of mental depression, feel blue and are often morosely believe that these conditions are due to outside influences over which they have little or no control. Nearly always, however, they can be traced to an internal source—acid-stomach. No one is to be wondered at. ## Thousands Have Kidney Trouble and Never Suspect It

Applicants for Insurance Often Rejected.

Judging from reports from druggists who are constantly in direct touch with the public, there is one preparation that has been very successful in overcoming these conditions. The mild and healing influence of Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root is soon realized. It stands the highest for its remarkable record of success.

An examining physician for one of the prominent Life Insurance Companies, in an interview on the subject, made the astonishing statement that one reason why so many applicants for insurance are rejected is because kidney trouble is so common to the American people, and a large majority of those whose applications are declined do not even suspect that they have the disease. It is on sale at all drug stores in bottles of two sizes, medium and large.

However, if you wish first to test this great preparation send ten cents to Dr. Kilmer & Co., Poughkeepsie, N. Y., for a sample bottle. When writing be sure and mention this paper.—Adv.
