USEFUL ANIMALS FOR FARMERS

The United States Department of Agriculture, in its report on livestock, gives the following information:

TOMATO TRELLES IS USEFUL

by William T. Mann

The following discussion of a method of trellising tomatoes, made by C. E. D. J. Smith of Michigan, is of interest to growers of this crop. The support for the plants is provided by 5x3-foot frames treated with creosote for protection against insects and diseases. The plants are grown in the ground, but the supports are later removed to the top of the trellises. The frames are designed to hold the plants in a horizontal position, with the stems parallel to the trellis. This arrangement allows the plants to grow more evenly and to produce more fruit. The trellis is made of wood and is attached to the frame with nails. The plants are tied to the trellis with twine or wire. This method of trellising is simple and effective and is recommended for use by growers of tomatoes.

ESSENTIALS TO GARDEN SITE

There are several essential features of a garden site that are important to consider when selecting a location for your garden. The soil should be well-drained and fertile, and it should be free from rocks and other obstacles. The site should also be sunny and protected from strong winds. The garden should be easily accessible, with good access to water and other garden supplies.

POISON BAIT FOR CUTWORMS

By A. H. Edwards

When cutworms are to be controlled, the bait is laid in the garden in the form of small pellets. The bait is then watered in and the worms are attracted to it. After being eaten, the worms are killed by the poison in the bait. This method of control is effective and is recommended for use by gardeners.

W. D. Higley

In our yearbook, the author of this article has presented an interesting and thought-provoking piece of writing. The author has explored the various aspects of critical thinking and the importance of evaluating information. The article is well-written and engaging, and it encourages readers to think critically about the world around us. The author's ideas are well-supported with examples from a variety of sources.

An increase in the production of sorghum syrup to relieve the current sugar shortage is being addressed by various companies. One company is increasing its production by 50%, while another is exploring new methods of extraction. This increase in production is expected to help meet the demand for sugar, which has been rising due to increased consumption.
