ARRANGEMENTS ARE BEING PERFECTED

For the Big Ball Game Friday—All The Old Timers Clamoring for Chance to Play

As soon as the Press appeared last week with the announcement that the "Old Timers" had challenged the Marion Reds and the challenge had been accepted applications to get in the line up flooded Capt. Guy Lamb of the "Has Beens" and he will therefore have much material to pick from. And they all insist that they are as good or better than any of the youngsters on the regular team and are going to show them up in great shape. You never can tell either. Imagine Jas. H. Orme striking out such sluggers as Driskill, Kimsey, et al. He says he is going to do it too. Also adds to the assertion that he is going to put over in the old cemetery himself. That alone will be worth the price of admission, though it is not guaranteed by the management.

Captain Guy is keeping his players a secret, with the exception of the ones already announced, as he is afraid the Reds will get cold feet and send to Louisville or somewhere and get a few ringers, and while he is confident of trimming the regular team, he does not want to stack up against anything imported.

Some of the city's most popular young ladies are already inviting their gentlemen friends to attend the game with them so they will have plenty of time to get enough of them to win that fine box of candy. With all this preparation it sure would be a joke on the Marion girls to have some fine young lady from out in the country walk off with the prize. There are plenty of them popular enough if they only get busy and bring 'em in. And that sure is a fine box of candy Mr. Orme has selected for you.

And as for the box of cigars to be given by Haynes and Taylor to the most popular man present, while everyone concedes that Hope Hudson has the best chance of anybody in the county Neil Guess says that he is going to let everybody know that "he also ran". Even Isom Morse says he is going to beg off from his "steady" long enough to enter this contest, not that he needs the cigars for he does not smoke, but just to show them he is still there with the ladies. But dear reader please remember that Doyle Vaughn is still in town and is a pretty safe bet for "place" anyhow.

And J. R. Sowers is going to give a glass of his famous lemonade to everybody there whether they win a prize or not. Take it all the way through there is going to be a grand time for all who attend. While the game will not start until 3:30 it might be a good idea for you to go down early in the afternoon as the committee in charge are liable to spring an extra or two on the program.

All this will come off next Friday afternoon, August 27th at Maxwell Park in Marion. Everybody in this and adjoining counties is invited.

Remember the lady with the most male escorts will be considered the most popular—and get the candy and the man escorting the most ladies will get the cigars.

TOM MIX COMING IN "THE SPEED MANIAC"

Tom Mix the dynamic William Fox hero is to appear tonight at the Strand Theatre in "The Speed Maniac" in which photoplay according to report he will surpass himself—if that be possible—in a lot of big new stunts of nerve and muscle which are strung upon a golden thread of romance such as makes every Tom Mix picture truly delightful.

The setting of the story is western and gives abundant room for the fun the broad humor touches and the charming love tale characteristic of Mix photodrama.

A big feature of the play is the wrecking of Mix's auto in a great track race. The realism of this incident is said to be astounding.

MAKE ROOM IN THE GARDEN FOR SPINACH

LEXINGTON, Ky., Aug. 20—Now is the time to sow late spinach that can be carried through the winter by mulching with straw. The New Zealand is the best variety and it will grow throughout the entire summer. Seed that is sown now should be allowed to grow and develop as much as possible before the straw mulch is applied. In case the plants become large some of them can be removed thereby preventing a crowded condition among the rest so that they will have a chance to become better established before winter.

INCREASE IN COST TO BE SLIGHT

Living costs in Louisville will not be seriously advanced by the increase in freight rates which became effective Thursday. In most instances the added costs of necessities resulting from the higher freight rates will be trivial. The Illinois Central Railroad has furnished the Times with a schedule showing what the increased cost of freight transportation will be on a score of commodities received in Louisville from central distributing points.

The increased cost, for instance of shipping a pair of men's shoes from Chicago to Louisville is shown to be 4-10 of a cent. The increase on a pair of women's shoes will be 3-10 of a cent. On a man's three-piece suit, it will be 6-10 of a cent. The increase on a woman's fall coat will be 4-10 of a cent and on a woman's summer dress 2-10 of a cent.

A ten pound pail of lard shipped from Chicago to Louisville will cost 6-10 of a cent more than formerly. A bushel of apples received from Chicago will cost 3 6-10 more. The added cost of shipping a dozen bananas from New Orleans will be 3-10 of a cent. It will cost but 1-10 of a cent more to ship a two pound can of fruit or vegetables from Chicago. A bushel of potatoes received from Minneapolis will cost 6 3-10 more for freight, and a twenty-four-pound bag of flour received from Minneapolis but 1 9-10 cents. Ten pounds of sugar from New Orleans will cost 1 1-10 cents more and ten pounds of coffee from New Orleans 1 1-10 cents more.

Those contemplating building will be interested in learning that the increased cost of shipping 1000 feet of yellow pine from Brookhaven, Miss., to Louisville will be $1.20 and of shipping 100 pounds of cement from Lasalle Illinois will be 3 1-2 cents.

Motorists are informed that a gallon of gasoline received here from Wood River Illinois will be shipped at an increased cost of 3-10 of a cent. A ton of coal from Kentucky mines will cost 25c more for transportation.

The farmer who markets his grain in Chicago may be expected to pay $1.20 a ton more for that privilege. A bushel of wheat shipped to Chicago will cost 2 4-10 more and a bushel of corn 2 4-10 cents. One hundred pounds of livestock will be charged 7c more for its ride to Chicago. The produce dealer who proposes to market eggs in Chicago will pay 5 8-10 cents more a crate after August 26, or 2-10 of a cent a dozen.—Louisville Post.

ALICE JOYCE HAS TIMELY PRODUCTION

Alice Joyce has the play of the hour "Dollars and the Woman," which will be shown at the Strand Theatre on Thursday August 26. With the high cost of living rampant and incomes unreasonably inflated the theme of this extraordinary play by Albert Payson Terhune dealing with extravagance when money is plenty not alone is a delight to lovers of good pictures but is pertinent to the present day mode of living.

As Madge Hillyer Miss Joyce through extravagance so well learns the misery of poverty that when wealth comes again she is not capable of enjoying it. The story is new—up to the minute.

SAY 'DEATH' WELL

BIGGEST IN STATE

BOWLING GREEN Ky.—The spectacular oil well fire on the Whitaker lease in which Fred Fulton lost his life after baffling the skill of fighters for over twelve hours was finally extinguished Thursday afternoon.

It is estimated that several thousand barrels of oil were either burned or lost on the ground. Oil experts claim the well is the largest ever brought in in Kentucky and compute it from 2,000 to 5,000 barrels.

The heat was terrific and spectators had to stand a half block away from the flames. Slowly the men fought the fire by throwing dirt upon it as large pipes from the boilers sent streams of steam into the seething mass of flames. Men could stay on the fighting line but a few moments at a time and then were compelled to run back to a safe distance. Sacks of dirt were flung in front of the fighters and better progress was made.

The well is on the farm of S. A. Kelley a local real estate man.

It was completed at 484 feet in the Beaver sand. A heavy gas pressure accompanied the oil and a solid stream of oil shot 300 feet into the air. The flames and smoke rolled high into the air and were plainly discernible in the city although eight or more miles away. All night long the flames and smoke licked the heavens and the sight was a most spectacular one. Hundreds visited the well Wednesday night and all day Thursday.

LATE SUMMER RADISHES

LEXINGTON, Ky., Aug. 20—Now is the time to spade up a small section of the garden and thoroughly prepare the soil for some late radishes. Since the radish is a quick maturing and hardy plant the white Vienna and Chertier varieties can be planted at this time without any danger of them becoming pithy.

These vegetables are especially delicious and every farmer should have some in his garden this fall.

WOMEN SPEAKERS TO BE ORGANIZED

An intensive campaign to capture the women's vote is being made by the Democratic headquarters according to the Louisville Post.

Harry V. McChesney who has been tipped for chairman of the speakers bureau is already at work outlining a speaking campaign. One of the features will be feminine speakers. Every County Chairman is being asked to submit the names of all available oratorical timber including the women many of whom were developed into "whirlwinds" through their war work. Fully as many women speakers as men are expected to be listed by the Democrats and when the speaking campaign is over the woods will have been thoroughly shelled.

The opening date for the campaign hasn't been fixed but will probably be around September 10. The use of automobiles has so increased the amount of work that a speaker can do that it isn't necessary to begin any earlier in McChesney's opinion.

The organization by county chairmen is almost completed and the next move will be the naming of women to be their first experience in the practical end of politics. The chief work of the women is believed will be to impress on their sex the privilege and duty of suffrage. There will probably be some women on the executive committee for the campaign, to be named by Chairman John T. Gray.

SAVING CLOVER SEED IS ECONOMICAL NOW

The department of agronomy, College of Agriculture, University of Kentucky advises the saving of clover seed this year for home use. Many more fields could have profitably saved seed this year if clover hullers were available. The second crop of clover made a good growth in many parts of the state this year. Despite the fact that seeds sown without a huller, ever, practical to save seed for home use.

The seed should be cut and raked into small windrows as soon as the seed heads are brown and the seed hard and glossy. It is a good plan to set the cutter as high as possible as the amount of straw to be handled will thus be reduced. Put the clover under cover when it is thoroughly dried or stack it and cover the stack with straw. During the late winter this material can be spread in a thin cover over the field to be sown to clover thus giving a liberal seeding.

The seed may be freed from the straw by running the clover through the separator if a grain separator is available. Although much of the clover seed will still be in chaff it can be sown without much trouble; also the chaff seed can be procured finally by flailing the seed out by hand. Chaff seed gives just as good results as clean seed and the only disadvantage in its use is the difficulty of distribution. It ought to be possible to get some of the men operating threshers to get attachments for their machines for cleaning clover seed, where there is a considerable amount of clover in a county. It is said that these attachments give satisfactory service and most manufacturers make the attachments.

SAY COAL PRICES WILL GO HIGHER

CHICAGO—A conference of Illinois coal operators was scheduled to discuss the plan of the operators for a separate agreement between them and Illinois miners to replace the Central competitive district agreement regulating the wage scale of miners since 1881.

Separate agreements will be made in Indiana Ohio and Pennsylvania also it was said by coal trade authorities who predicted a rise in the price of bituminous coal and substantial increases in wages because of competitive bidding among the operators of the different states for mine labor which they said would result.

President Frank Farrington of the Illinois miners announced that a scale committee of the miners would meet in Chicago Monday with an operator's committee and warned the miners under his jurisdiction to remain at work.

IS SANITY RETURNING?

In one of our large cities there is a manufacturer who employs numerous traveling men who penetrate every nook and corner of the country. These men are instructed, in addition to the sale of goods, to keep their fingers constantly upon the pulse of the people and report to the home office.

This manufacturer is firmly of the opinion that the country has about recovered from its delirium of commercial and financial insanity and is on the return to normal conditions and stability.

The public has ceased to buy with such extravagant abandon, confining itself to the purchase of such articles as are legitimately required.

This has curtailed the demand, with the result that thousands of employees have been laid off, and others will follow.

Most of these men have spent their money as easily as it was earned, and it is only a question of time when they will be forced to accept other employment at reduced compensation.

This, thinks the manufacturer, marks the beginning of a downward trend in the cost of labor, with a consequent decline in the price of the finished products.

He thinks the decline will be slow and gradual in all lines, but effective and he does not look for a panic or any other great disturbance of our commercial and financial systems.

Sounds reasonable, and we hope it is true.

FOOLS IN A DAY.

Have you ever been in Washington, or in our State capital, or in any other place where the politicians of both parties mingle?

If so, you have noticed the personal friendliness of Republicans for Democrats and of Democrats for Republicans.

Each knows the personal worth of the other and respects it regardless of party differences.

But what happens when one of these men is nominated for a high office which the other party covets?

His nomination creates a distrust of the man—in the eyes of the opposite party.

He is full of sin and corruption. He is an advocate of all that is unholy in national and state affairs.

He is owned body and breeches by "interests" that are inimical to the welfare of the people.

He is a menace which must be crushed and annihilated without mercy.

As a citizen he is high minded and respected by his fellow men.

As a nominee he is a red rag in the face of a mad bull.

Politics works wonders in the minds of men, and in its realm the wise man of yesterday becomes the fool of today.

A good citizen stopped us on the street a few days ago. He had a case of nerves. He was peeved because "nothing ever happens in this town." He will recover.

But his remark started a train of thoughts in the editorial mind, and we are passing them on to you, as is the custom of our profession.

It is true that "nothing ever happens in this town" and that is one of its beauties, its greatest asset.

We have no murders, no riots, no race disturbances, no class conflicts, no rowdiness—none of the numerous things that happen so often in other places.

We have a class of citizens who are law abiding, God fearing, patriotic, and who respect the rights of other people.

Our citizens are energetic, thrifty, and are producers—not destroyers. They are workers in the hive of industry—not drones.

Truth abounds because it is a community of clean upright people who have nothing to hide from the rest of the world.

It should be a matter of pride to every citizen that "nothing ever happens in this town."

A little child speaks as it thinks. When it grows to maturity it often speaks without thinking.

Set a thief to catch a thief and you have two to watch.

If you are able to name the wise men of this town it is an indication that you are one of the number.

Opportunity greets you, hesitates, and turns to the man who beckons. Your procrastination is your loss.

Do not judge the worth of a man by his ability to talk. Brains seldom wag.

The foolish man makes a big noise over a little thought. That is the reason he is foolish.

Beware of the man who knows it all. He knows nothing and does not know it.

If your neighbor is full of faults let others tell them to you.

Honesty wins its own reward, but often it fails of delivery.

Every elector votes his own convictions—or somebody else's.

When a man begins to feel his own greatness it is time for the public to look up another less great.

The man of many promises is known by those he doesn't keep.

If you simply must let off steam by finding fault with some one, begin on yourself. You may convince yourself that it is true.

The fellow who believes in town improvement should first improve that which he owns or controls.

Those who would silence the tongue of gossip should let their own be the first to cease to wag.

The man who speaks with bitter tongue is the first to feel its venom.

You can make your worst enemy look small by speaking kindly to him. The public is not slow to judge.

The pathway of honor lies in front of every man, but he cannot expect others to be continually pointing it out to him.

Looking truth in the face is often more profitable than pleasant.

When Stoppers Are Obstinate.

Bottle stoppers have an annoying habit of refusing to come out just when one wants them to do so. The following is a sure way of removing the most refractory stopper. By means of a feather apply a drop or two of salad oil just where the stopper joins the neck of the bottle. Then put the bottle at a little distance from a fire, where it will become slightly warmed, but not hot. The oil rapidly works down in between the stopper and the neck, and by giving the stopper a slight tap the stopper will come out.

Day Dreams

By GEORGE E. COBB

It was as if she possessed the treasure of the world that Olive Morse kissed a little square box she had just received by mail. There was haste, a fluttering excitement in face and manner, as if the act was stealthy and guilty, and evidently a harsh call had something to do with her precipitancy. Olive hastened downstairs to confront her spinster aunt, Selma Brooks, sour, chilling, severe as usual.

"Did you get some mail?" challenged Miss Brooks peremptorily.

"Yes, aunt," replied Olive. "It was a letter from my old school chum, Nettie Deane. She has married Warren Nagel."

"About time, I should think!" snapped Aunt Selma. "Been engaged for three years. Well, don't let that put any nonsense in your head. I am going to pass the day with Mrs. Wadham."

Olive suppressed a sigh of relief. Her hand lovingly caressed that little box through the folds of her dress. She had not told her aunt that a letter was not all that the postman had brought. She could scarcely repress her joy at realizing that she was to have a full day to herself. As she thought of the letter Nettie had written her and the box and its inclosure she anticipated twelve hours filled with girlish dreams of romance.

Olive had received her first piece of wedding cake, for it was that the box contained. She longed for Aunt Selma to depart whilst she might hasten to a favorite nook in the woods, where she could read and reread that gushing letter, so full of joy and hope. It was a spot enclosed with vines—a veritable lady's bower and one where she was sure to be free from intrusion, where she could repose on the most velvety of green swards and dream the blissful hours away.

Olive's correspondence with her girlhood friend was the only variation in an otherwise bleak and dreary existence. Shut out from social pleasures of every kind, she had lived in fancy and sympathy the existence of Nettie, following step by step the events in the experience of her friend and longing for the actual companionship of the outside world that seemed so sunshiny and sweet. When her aunt had gone Olive put on her outing cap and crossed the meadow in the direction of the woods. Her eyes were bright, her cheeks aglow as she reached the sequestered spot where she had spent so many peaceful hours weaving the day dreams that had become a radiant part of her life.

Olive sat down on a little knoll in her sheltered hideout and read over the letter that told of her dear friend's wedding. Then she unfolded the box, carefully folded back the paper lace surrounding the dark rich square of cake, broke off a corner and laughed outright as she discovered a small make a pillow of her apron and place the box under it and dream on the cake her future husband would come to her in her sleep.

Insensibly she drifted into somewhat filmy visions. She must have slept for an hour when she awoke and her eyes half unclosed. The vines at one end of the nook were drawn aside and there stood revealed in the bright sunlight a young man arrayed in the sliver garb of a cavalier of an age long gone by, a jeweled sword at his side, a jaunty hat with pure white plumes set upon his head. The face Olive would never cease to remember. She smiled and the intruder smiled back. She sighed deliciously, for to her it was surely fancy—a dream in this hour of fantasies. Then a whistle sounded outside and the handsome cavalier faded away like a spirit in thin air.

Olive closed her eyes, smilingly recalling her dream, longing for a world where dreams come true. When she went home she wrote a long letter to Nettie, reciting the incident of her "phantom lover" and felicitating over the ideal suitor that fancy had brought to her.

"Mrs. Wadham has her hands full with ten transient boarders," recited her aunt, when she returned. "There's a party of movie people acting out a play for the author. He's the main actor, too. We saw them play a part of it—a Spanish play, I think, for Mr. Davenal, the principal character, wore a regular court suit just like I've seen in pictures, plumed hat, blue silk coat, jeweled sword. Why, what is the matter, Olive?"

"Oh, nothing, aunt," declared Olive, suppressing a cry of enlightenment. "Tell me more about him—them," and in a few minutes Olive was assured that her cavalier visitor was an actuality.

Two nights later she knew it. She was awakened from sleep to find the room full of smoke; outside all was glare. Some one dashed into the apartment with the quick command: "Wrap yourself up in the bedspread and I'll try to get you to safety. The house is on fire!" And amid the flame radiance Olive recognized the intruder of her woodland bower.

Raymond Davenal was just romantic enough to see the workings of destiny in these two odd meetings. Rescuer, and her ideal, to Olive he became the center of all her thoughts after that, and when she wrote again to her friend Nettie it was to announce that she had become engaged to Raymond Davenal, "the author of the most popular photo plays on the motion picture screen."

A Strange Wedding

By RALPH HAMILTON

How to live on a three hundred dollar a year pension and the sparse produce raised on a small acre surrounding the house he had the free use of during his lifetime, was a problem Morris Vehon had solved, although at a cost of close pinching. It was a lonely spot at the edge of a quiet little village, and life for the old man and his motherless daughter, Eulalie, was a round of dull monotony.

They had been now five years at Rosecrest and Eulalie had grown into a lovely, graceful girl of twenty. From the wreck of a former fortune her father had saved quite a library, a piano and some choice pictures, and these graced the humble little home and surrounded it with something of the refinements of intelligence and culture. The girl had always done her full duty as helper and daughter. Often in a fit of melancholy Mr. Vehon would upbraid himself for caging her bright spirit away from the joys of life.

"I am very happy and contented as it is, dear father," Eulalie would insist. "I must inherit from dear dead mother a love for the charms of nature amid which she was brought up, and I find no false friends among the flowers and the birds."

They were seated one evening on the porch, both dreamy and lulled to a sweet serenity by the balmy air and the soothing perfume of many flowers. The pale starlight showed the rose-hung gates with the stretch of purple firs beyond. A lurking moon on the far horizon had just begun to tinge the landscape with a delicate silvery glow. The distant chug! chug! of an automobile aroused them. It seemed coming down the road passing the house, but the sounds became less distinct finally, as though the machine had turned off at some side road, and at this Mr. Vehon wondered, for even the one main thoroughfare was a rutty, uneven highway.

Perhaps half an hour passed by when down the latter came a madly rushing auto. It halted directly in front of the house and one of three men it held sprang from the machine and unceremoniously rushed up to the porch.

"Limousine," he spoke rapidly, "red and black, two men aboard. Has it passed here within the past two hours?"

"None such, none at all," replied Mr. Vehon. "Not many of any kind do," and the man hastened back to the road, and the machine, turning, retraced its course amid an excited confab among its passengers.

The incident somewhat disturbed the serenity of Eulalie and her father. Within half an hour the latter made a movement as if intent on going into the house and Eulalie joined him.

"Everything is all right in the barn, father," she said, and a few minutes later crossed the rear yard for the purpose stated. She drew back as a hot breath of air came through the open door of the structure. Then the lantern gleam fell upon the front of an automobile. Eulalie lifted the lantern. Its rays showed a man in chauffeur attire standing at the step, and half reclining on the rear seat, a pale young man, suggesting an invalid.

"We ran in here because we were in trouble," hastily spoke the chauffeur. "Is there a man about the house?"

"My father, yes," said the bewildered Eulalie. "I will send him at once."

Mr. Vehon went to the barn. Soon he and the chauffeur came carrying the young man between them. He was borne to a room upstairs. The chauffeur, an hour later, left the house. Mr. Vehon came down to Eulalie with a serious face.

"We have become unwillingly a part of a tragedy," he said. The young man is Burton Gray, and he is seeking to evade relatives who are after his fortune. They have been giving him a slow poison, and his chauffeur was trying to get him beyond their reach. The automobile which we saw earlier in the evening held the pursuing plotters. The chauffeur thinks his young master is dying. He has left him in our care while he goes away, striving to throw their enemies off the trail. We must get a doctor for this Burton Gray and nurse him until it is safe for him to be removed."

And that was why the house was turned into a hospital for a week. The physician made secret daily visits and expressed the belief that his patient would not survive, but Burton Gray seemed to be content and relieved at the kind ministrations of Morris Vehon and his daughter.

"I am a doomed man," he said one day to the former. "The relatives after my fortune have probably destroyed the will I have made. 'I shall battle them. You are poor, your daughter deserves a broader life than she is passing here. I ask her to marry a dying man, who wishes to reward her great kindness and your own by providing for all your future.'"

It was a solemn ceremony, the marriage performed with only the doctor and a clergyman present, yet from that hour Burton Gray seemed to revive. He passed the crisis of his illness, and the happiest moment in the life of Eulalie was that in which, able to get about at last, she supported his wavering steps as he led him out into the lovely little garden that was a paradise to both.

Oil Used in Days of Pliny.
Petroleum has been known from ancient times. It was put to practical use as a fuel around the Caspian sea much earlier than elsewhere. Under the name of "Sicilian oil," it was burned in lamps in Rome in the days of Pliny. It entered into use in the arts in China centuries ago, and was discovered by the early settlers in America.

Nature's Supremacy.
Emerson in his essay on Nature says: "At the gates of the forest the surprised man of the world is forced to leave his city estimates of great and small, wise and foolish. The knapsack of custom falls off his back with the first step he makes into these precincts. Here is sanctity which shames our legions and reality which discredits our heroes."

Responsibility.
Nothing can be so inspiring to a human being as the idea that he is of value, that his help is really wanted. Nothing can so enforce the doctrine of responsibility as the realization that it rests with us to choose whether we shall mend or mar, shall beautify or deface, some portion of the work—Oliver Lodge.

Food Value of Potatoes.
That potatoes differ widely in food value is shown by a report of the government's scientific committee. It is laid down that the most useful potato for food is the one which contains the largest amount of dry matter. Where two varieties are practically equal in this respect the nitrogen they contain enters into the estimation of their feeding quality.

Stains on Photos After Fixing.
The brown or yellow stains which are sometimes found on photographic prints after being taken out of the fixing bath can be prevented by using a tablespoonful of vinegar in the water in which the prints are washed after being developed.

Feet of Peacocks.
The ugliness of the peacock's feet is a matter of remark in classic literature. Reference is even made to it in fables. Which is illustrative of the ease with which mistaken ideas are circulated and maintained. For the fact is that the peacock's feet are not ugly at all. They are rather handsome than otherwise.

THE BELL RINGER

By AGNES G. BROGAN.

The man of distinguished appearance in the inclosed car looked inquiringly from right to left as he drove up the village street. He had promised his father to seek out, during his travels, a certain ministerial friend, whose promising career had ended in this insignificant and hidden corner of the world.

The man of business had almost forgotten his promise, until the "Hillcrest" sign on the weather-beaten station reminded him of his father's request. It was here that Reverend David Roberts had come in ill health and discouragement to make his home.

James Harding's father and David Roberts had been classmates together at the old university. David's first charge had quickly led to a greater, and still greater pastorate, until it became fashionable to be numbered among the throngs who went to hear his brilliant addresses. Then, quickly, came nervous breakdown and failure. Weakly recovered, David had lost his hold upon men. Some blamed this to his own loss of confidence in human nature.

The theologian had loved and married a young society woman, whose only admiration for his great work was his exhibition of power. And with his necessary acceptance of humbler fields the society wife left him, to return to her people. So, thereafter, David went from charge to charge alone, and it was not until the death of Elizabeth Roberts many years later, that he wrote his wife's people asking that his daughter who had been raised in their care, be sent to him in his village home to visit, and to make her future choice between them.

James Harding smiled cynically, as he rode through the streets of Hillcrest, at this proposition.

So James Harding entered the unfamiliar vicinity of a church street, and then stood there in silent surprise. For it was a girl who tolled the swaying bell, her white arms drawing rhythmically at the rough ropes. And it was the upraised face of the girl, in all its appealing loveliness, which held him silent and wondering.

She turned presently to give him a frank smile of greeting, then closing the door upon her bell rope, came to wait his message.

One glance at himself, and at the unaccustomed elegance of his car, seemed to tell her that he would have a message. Harding gave it.

"Mr. Roberts will be here in half an hour," she answered him. "Perhaps you would like to wait in the vestry."

And as Harding waited, he decided that it might be interesting to climb the narrow stair that he had noticed beyond the hanging bell ropes. He might be able from the platform of the tiny tower to obtain a view of the surrounding country. So it was with a long-forgotten sense of adventure that he ascended the ladder-stair. And there at the top, in a little dusty attic sort of resting place, sat the girl. Her dark eyes widened as she saw him, then again came her understanding smile.

"You'll have to climb up the smaller ladder to get into the tower," she directed; but he paused, wondering at the studious appearance of the tiny loft. A wooden box used as a desk was littered with scribbled pages, a shabby pile of books lay heaped upon the floor.

The last rays of daylight filtering down from above made a halo of the girl's hair as she knelt before the wooden box with that rapt look in her eyes—she was to James Harding some fair spirit of his devotion. And though he might not understand what it was that held her absorbed, as he had first seen her, he lifted his hat in apology, and went back down the stair. He sat smiling during the service, to which his father's old friend begged him to remain, at the unaccustomed incidents of this evening.

A strange new interest possessed him to see again, and hear about, the lovely, perplexing young creature who swayed church bells and wrote in a tower. But as the man of great affairs listened to the old minister's trembling words, he was impressed by the breathless attention of his hearers, and then promptly forgot them. In the sincerity of the simple message. And as the two men sat later, in the comfortable room of a small cottage, Harding questioned abruptly concerning the girl.

"A woman sexton," he added, smiling, "is unusual."

The worn face of the minister seemed illumined by some inner glow. "My daughter—rings the church bells," he replied, "but I guess—you'd better call her pastor. Instead of sexton, unless you'd call her an angel of light—as she is. You see, Bessie writes my sermons in her own telling way. My memory is gone for study, so Bessie studies for me. The people are satisfied with our arrangement—they love us both. Bessie visits their sick; she does all those things which I long to do—and cannot. I'm an old man now and broken. I will call Bessie. She will be anxious to have you stop with us for the night."

And as the three sat together on the cottage porch with the scent of lilacs about them and the moonlight shining on Bessie's upraised face James Harding knew that the girl had made her choice. And that truth and sacrifice and even happiness might still be found.

MEMORY DAY

By MARY M'DONOUGH.

The girl with the dreamy, sad eyes, found her way to the little grave in the sleepy churchyard, far away from the teeming city.

She laid her offering of flowers on the mound, and then sat beside it, dreaming dreams of another mound in Flanders—perhaps uncared for, perhaps unnoticed; dreaming dreams of other and happier May times, when life seemed rose-tinted and glowing with promise.

A little old lady, shriveled and faltering, her skin brown and wrinkled with the years, broke in upon her reveries. She seemed surprised to find another grieving at her shrine, surprised to find the lovely remembrance of flowers. She brushed an aged hand across her forehead, as if trying to remember the sweet-faced stranger.

"Are you Margaret Ryan's granddaughter?"

The girl rose and took the old lady's hands in hers.

"I'm Joan Myles," she answered with her wonderful half-sad smile, "and I came from the city. I spent a vacation here last fall. I've always liked to wander alone through churchyards, and I came across this tombstone. It—it seemed mystically dear to me because—it bore the name of the man I was to marry. He—he fell on Flanders fields. The date on the stone was so long ago I thought perhaps no one remembered, and since I could not go to my own beloved's resting place, I thought I could seem nearer to him on this memory day if I came out here where his name was."

But the little old lady was thinking of her own lover-husband, who had fought in the Civil war, and who was still a young, handsome lad to her.

"What is that?" she breathed, "it makes them seem nearer. My folks can't understand my remembering and grieving still, but the poet spoke truly when he said:

"The heart that has truly loved, never forgets."

But as truly loves on to the end, and I never have forgotten during all the years."

And so they stayed there for long hours that flew by on wings, while they talked a little and dreamed.

At last the grounds became deserted. A flaming, riotous sunset hung its exquisite picture over distant hills and reflected itself in the shimmering Merimac. With a start the girl arose.

"It's very late. You must be faint," she said. "Let me help you to your home. I had no idea we were here so long! But somehow the visit has strangely touched me. I seem more hopeful; my cross seems easier to bear. Perhaps—"

Then she started. She grew deathly pale, and trembled from head to foot, for straight in front of her was the image of her sweetheart. A piercing scream, and she fell forward in a dead faint.

When she regained consciousness, she found herself in his arms, with the little old lady, whom he addressed as "Grandmother," bending close. The words of "Antonio" in an old poem came to her thoughts:

"Oh, ghost or spirit of my buried love! I know not, care not which, But be welcome, thrice welcome to this heart of mine!"

"Jim! Jim!" she breathed, when at last she could speak, "they told me you were dead!"

"And I might as well be," he returned, "when they told me you had broken your faith with me and married."

"Married?" she gasped. "My dear, my dear! What made you think that?"

"Celeste Royden broke it to me gently in a kind, tactful letter. She was beautifully thoughtful in those black 'across-the-ocean' days for me."

"And it was Celeste Royden who broke the news to me of your falling in Flanders. She was inexpressibly sympathetic, and it was her advice that I should seek forgetfulness in another city, away from the haunting memories of you."

"And you are still Joan Myles?"

The years seemed to slip from his shoulders and something of a hope that he had thought turned to ashes shone forth in his face. "You've not broken your faith?" It seemed almost too wonderful not to be a dream or fiction. Then a deep, flaming look of wrath came into his face.

"As for Celeste," he muttered. "Never mind, Celeste." Joan answered simply: "Jealous, unhappy girls act unaccountably at times, and since we really have each other—since we're going to be so beautifully happy again—let's forgive her."

"And to think that you should have come to grandfather's grave!" he marvelled. "We worried our grandmother staying so long. Had I not come in search of her, I might never have found you again. It seems odd, too, that I should have visited her now."

"Truly the ways of the Lord are wonderful," spoke the little old lady devoutly. "His ways are not always our ways. I shall have many more years left to me to take care of this precious grave, but I know now that you two, who have found happiness here, will never forget it."

Tendently they helped the sweet old soul, who had not forgotten. And so, on Memorial day—that dear, bitter-sweet time when the world pauses to dream of departed "perfect days" with their haunting "memories that bless and burn"—Joan and Jim started life anew, bright with promise and hope.

GLAD POLITICS ARE ELIMINATED

Endorsement of New School Board By Farmers Is Voiced By High Official In National Organization

The American Farm Bureau Federation is emphatic in its attitude toward education in the rural districts. Mr. J. H. Crenshaw, the treasurer of this great organization of farmers, in a recent interview granted your correspondent, declared:

The Kentucky Farm Bureau stands for the elimination of politics from the control of educational affairs. The farmer boy and girl of Kentucky are entitled to the best mental training it is possible to secure. The question for to make the world a better place because of our having lived in it, then we must look to the public schools for preparation for life; for the intellectual life of a people will never rise higher than its public schools.

GREAT PIECE OF WORK

The Hon. J. N. Camden was visited in his country home near Versailles by your staff correspondent this summer to secure his viewpoint of the new school laws. That he is heartily in favor of them is shown by his statement which follows:

I know the rural school because I live in the country and see it at work during the whole school year, and I know it needs improvement.

I feel that the two political parties in Kentucky did a great and fine piece of work when they combined forces and passed a group of new and thoroughly up-to-date school laws. Among those laws passed none will be more far reaching in its results than the one creating a Board of Education for each county, composed of five members, who will have the power of selecting a county superintendent, and thus take the office out of party politics.

Next November the public will naturally be very much interested in the national candidates and the national issues, but the matter of good schools and strong teachers should not be forgotten for a single moment. Good schools in the Twentieth Century are vitally important to each and every county in the Commonwealth. The voter should not forget that the finest and best National Government in the world will not educate the boys and girls out in the country. So it is up to the voters in Kentucky to see to it that progressive County Boards of Education are elected next November.

J. H. CRENSHAW,
Cadiz, Ky.,
Treasurer of the American Farm Bureau.

years past has been how can this be accomplished, now the solution is presented in the new school laws.

A law is no stronger than public sentiment, no law will work automatically. Are the farmers really and truly interested in the education of their children? Are they really and truly 100 per cent Americans? Are they opposed to Bolshevism? Do they think this government worthy of, and are they willing to do their best that it be perpetuated?

Everything depends upon the interest manifested in the election of the County Board of Education, of the election of men who will without fear or favor stand first for a square deal for the boys and girls of the State, who will have their interest as of first consideration; their future as of prime importance.

There are a number of men and women in every county in Kentucky fully competent to compose these boards is unquestioned. The County Farm Bureaus should take an active part in impressing on them their responsibility; on calling the attention of the people to them, on seeing that the names of such men and women are placed on the ballot and on an aggressive campaign that their election be assured.

The Kentucky Farm Bureau endorses unqualifiedly the law creating the new County Boards of Education and will wholeheartedly give its aid to any county asking for assistance in advising the people of the great opportunity it offers, for happier homes, for more prosperity, for the greater service and for bigger living. The lives of people can not be greater than their ability to live and their ability to live is measured by their knowledge of life. If we are saved to serve and born into the world to render service,

HON. J. N. CAMDEN,
Versailles, Ky.,
Democratic National Committeeman.

One point should not be forgotten when candidates for places on this board are being voted for and that is that they must not be pledged to any special person for the office of County Superintendent. The voter should help elect strong men on the board and leave them absolutely free to select a county superintendent who will make good. In other words, the voter should think of the boys and girls in his county who are not getting a fair square deal in the matter of schooling and forget who happens to wish the office.
