LETTER FROM DENVER, COL.

I have just learned through the probating of his will, of the death of Ben W. Belt. It was back in the early 80's when I first knew him and up to the time of my leaving Kentucky we were intimate friends and I loved him for his sterling qualities. He was truly a good man and no doubt will be greatly missed by his neighbors and friends.

During my official career as Sheriff of Crittenden county I always made it convenient to spend a night with him when in his neighborhood, and I recall his having told me of the circumstances surrounding him in early life that made it impossible to acquire an education, but his good judgment and honesty of purpose made him a very useful citizen in the community in which he lived.

Since leaving my native state and my boyhood chums a great many of my old reliable friends have passed into the Great Beyond and I wonder if the younger men are measuring up to the requirements to take their places. Crittenden county has a national reputation of having produced more prominent and useful men than any other individual county in the United States, and I hope as time goes on she may continue to maintain that reputation.

Wishing you the compliments of the season and with hearty good wishes for The Crittenden Press, I am, Yours truly, JNO. T. FRANKS.

O. E. PHILLIPS PASSES AWAY

Orville Emmett Phillips died at his home at Nunns on Friday, November 12, after an illness of four weeks. He was a good citizen and a prominent member of the Rosebud Methodist church. His remains were laid to rest in Rosebud cemetery, Rev. Richardson conducting the funeral services. He leaves a wife, Mrs. Kittie Howerton Phillips, a mother, Mrs. Mazy Phillips, five sisters, Mrs. Birda Samuels, Mrs. Rosa O'Neal, Miss Hattie Phillips, Mrs. Ada O'Neal and Mrs. Ethel McDowell, all of this county; one brother, George Dewey Phillips, of Evansville.

HE DIDN'T DO IT

Some time last April Mr. John Nation was arrested for alleged compulsion of whipping a nine year old son of Mr. Mark Brown by Mr. Brown.

At that time The Press printed a story of the affair from such information as could be obtained.

Last Tuesday Mr. Nation was in to see us and brought indisputable evidence that his part in the affair was absolutely an innocent one and that he did not ask that the boy be whipped at all.

The Press sometimes makes mistakes—and sometimes the person giving us the information is mistaken—but when this happens we are more than glad to print a correction.

Mr. A. Higgins, of Evansville, representing a timber concern of that city, was in Marion and the country a few days this week.

Mrs. Belle Wallace and daughter, Fonda, of Blackford, were in Marion Tuesday.

MISS DUNN WEDS MR. BUNN

A short time ago it was announced that there would be a Christmas wedding in Marion, the date mentioned being December 25, and the parties named as principal figures in the happy event being Mr. Charles F. Bunn, of Charleston, S. C., and Miss Lillie Belle Dunn, of this city.

On Saturday, December 18—one week before Christmas—Mr. Bunn and Miss Dunn stole a very dexterous march on their unsuspecting friends by coming up town, going to the county clerk's office and procuring a license, then hying themselves to the Baptist parsonage, where they were happily united in marriage, Dr. W. P. Meroney, pastor of the First Baptist Church, officiating.

Mr. Bunn is a member of the United States Civil Service stationed at Charleston, S. C., and has made many friends during his stay in the city.

The bride is the handsome daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Henry Dunn, of this city, and has many accomplishments and many friends in Marion.

Mr. and Mrs. Bunn left on the 10:20 train for Charleston S. C., where they will make their home.

This marriage is the culmination of a very pretty and romantic courtship. About four years ago, during the late World War, a number of young men stationed at far-off Honolulu, became lonesome and advertised for young lady correspondents.

A number of Marion girls answered the advertisement, each choosing the name of a different young man. Among those who answered the ad was Miss Lillie Belle Dunn. Just what name she chose for her correspondent is not known to the Press; but when Miss Dunn's letter was received by the gentleman addressed, another young man, who had not advertised, was standing near and seeing the name, Lillie Belle Dunn, was struck with the similarity of their names. This man was Mr. Bunn. He begged the correspondent to let him answer the letter instead of himself and was given permission to do so. So Mr. Bunn answered the letter of Miss Dunn and a correspondence ensued. It is said that love laughs at locksmiths. It might also be added that Cupid grins at the distance between Marion and Honolulu. Just how many letters passed between the two correspondents is unknown to us, but two years ago Mr. Bunn, having come back to Uncle Sam's domain, made a visit to Marion where, for the first time the two unknown correspondents met each other. Cupid evidently met with them, and after Mr. Bunn had returned to his home in Charleston the correspondence was resumed. Later on Mr. Bunn made a number of visits to Marion, the last one being a week ago with the happy result as aforesaid.

Mrs. Sam Gugenheim very charmingly entertained a few of her friends on Tuesday, December 21 at a bridge luncheon. The home was very attractive in cedar holly and cut flowers. Those who enjoyed Mrs. Gugenheim's hospitality were: Mesdames J. S. Henry, C. S. Nunn, J. P. Guess, Hurt Yates, Ed Van Felt, W. O. Tucker, R. B. Cook, William Barnett, C. W. Boogher, O. S. Denny, Frank Edwards and Miss Katherine Vandell.

WILLOUGHBY H. GUESS

A few weeks ago there was given in the Press a story of the visit of Mr. Willoughby H. Guess to this office. At that time Mr. Guess, who is 90 odd years old, could not say just how many grand-children he had, having lost count. Through the kindness of his son, Silas Guess, we have obtained this information.

Mr. Guess, who is perhaps the oldest man in Crittenden county, has been married three times, is the father of 21 children, 13 of whom are living and good citizens of the county. He also has 54 grand-children, 58 great grand-children and one great great grand-child, divided among his 13 sons and daughters as follows: T. C. Guess, 10 children and 24 grand-children; T. R. Guess 6 children and 5 grand-children; J. A. Guess, four children and eight grand-children; Mrs. R. A. Ordway, nine children, 18 grand-children and one great grand-child; Mrs. Mary Steele, six children; Silas Guess, eight children and three grand-children; J. H. Guess, one child; M. W. Guess, two children; B. I. Guess one child; Hurley Guess, two children; Louis Guess two children; Mrs. Delia Dodge, two children; Mrs. Ida Wilson, one child. Can any other family beat it?

GASOLINE BOAT DISAPPEARS

A gasoline boat belonging to Sylvester Sturgeon and used as a ferry boat and to make twice daily rounds of the government lights along the shore, disappeared from the landing at Weston Friday night of last week. It is supposed that the boat was stolen. A few days later Mr. Sturgeon received a telephone message from Carversville stating that his boat was in the mouth of a creek near that place. The wind being very high and the river extremely rough on that night, it is surmised that the thief or thieves despoiled the boat, leaving it to float down the river.

RESIDENCE BURNED

The residence of Luther Vaughn, on Rochester Avenue, was burned to the ground Monday morning at 1:30 o'clock, the family barely escaping with their lives. Mrs. Vaughn, in escaping from the burning building, was severely, perhaps fatally burned by the flames; a small child received slight burns about the face and hands; Tilman King, the 16 year old step-son, was painfully burned on his arms and face.

The Vaughn family were at home and asleep when the fire broke out, which is supposed to have resulted from a defective flue. Lee Bryant, a neighbor, seeing the fire from his home ran over to the Vaughn residence and gave the alarm. The fire at that time was well under way and the roof falling in. Mr. Vaughn awoke first and awaking his wife, he grabbed a child under each arm and rushed for the door. By this time the flames were breaking thru the ceiling. Tilman King, the step-son, was sleeping in an adjoining room. Mrs. Vaughn, springing from the bed, ran to the door leading to the room where the step-son was sleeping to awaken him. As she opened the door the flames rushed through the opening seriously burning her face, arms, shoulders and other parts of her body. In order to escape the step-son had to rush through the flames, which he did, receiving painful burns.

In escaping from the burning building the Vaughn family saved nothing except their night clothes.

The estimated value of the building with its furniture and household goods is about $2500, with an insurance on the house of $800.

UNCLE BILLY AT SUGAR GROVE

I will say to you and the readers of The Press that I have passed thru 72 Christmases but to me this was the nicest and most pleasant I have ever struck. The singing was fine, the prayers were fervent and the sermon first class, because it was the gospel in its simplicity, and the people heard it gladly. The order was fine. Bro. Pickett kept the house warm, everybody had a full seat and was welcome. This was clearly demonstrated at the noon hour. Oh, if T. J. Yandell and W. T. Oakley had been present they, perhaps would have understood some things.

These people gave me a square meal and Squire Drennan's wife prepared for me a fat squirrel extra. My, boys it pays to be a man at home. Do you catch the thought? When the good things were picked up and the social hour over, Bro. Walker, the choir leader, and his singers surrounded the organ. My, what singing! Mrs. George Hill, who was the director of the service, called on Bro. Tom Walker to lead in prayer, then with a well arranged program she began the work.

Thirty-eight pieces were recited by the boys and girls. My, those noble children! She closed with a piece composed of nine characters. Then the head of the barrel was knocked out by Mr. Howard Phillips and Mr. Enoch Fox. Two boys with baskets full of apples made two rounds waiting on the crowd. It was amazing to see the children's eyes as the baskets went round. But oh hush! Some good people broke the alabaster box over me by filling my pockets full of apples and a nice box full of the rest of the dinner.

JEFF TRAVIS RESIGNS.

Hon. R. L. Moore, County Judge, Crittenden County, Ky.,

Dear Sir: On account of some dissatisfaction brought about by some misunderstandings, mistakes on my part, differences of opinion among some of the citizens of the county concerning some special work which I have been doing on the roads of the county I deem it expedient that I should resign the place I hold as County Road Engineer; therefore, you will please accept this as my resignation, to take effect on the first day of January 1921.

I entreat that you, because of this resignation, do not infer that I am trying to shirk duty or ardent work and weighty responsibility; nor do I wish you to style me "a quitter", because I really liked the work because of its constructive character, and felt that I was serving humanity by making smoother many rough places that came in their way. Too, I feel that I am leaving many places, which, when all prejudices and jealousies clear away, will stand as monuments to commemorate my acts as County Road Engineer.

With best wishes, I beg to remain, Yours very truly,

E. JEFFREY TRAVIS

Mr. Everett Cook, who spent the holidays in Marion, returned to Rosiclar Wednesday.

PASTOR AND WIFE POUNDED GOOD FASHIONED

The above expresses what the Second Baptist Church of Marion did to her pastor and wife this Christmas when they entered into secret councils and finally ended their schemes in entering the pastor's home, going straight to the kitchen and depositing on and around the table such things as are necessary to make the kitchen and dining table worth while, such as jellies, preserves, cakes, canned goods, pickles, hams, beef roast, and lots of other things.

But above all, it was an expression of appreciation of church to pastor and wife, for which we thank God and the church, take courage and say pound us again no offense, thank you.

UNFINISHED BUSINESS

We folks in Marion and out in the county seem to be some of the best starters—and the poorest finishers in the business.

Some months ago the city council passed a whole page full of ordinances relative to operating automobiles, etc.; ordered the city marshal to have posts put up in the center of the most used street intersections, instructed the street committee to make a tour of the city to see what new sidewalks were needed, ad infinitum. No visible results of same have been found.

And a little later on a lot of chin music was used up on the problem of fixing up the well on the water-meister corner of the courthouse yard. It was really cleaned out a nice cement curbing was built around the top and an old second hand pump installed therein which for a few days would wheeze out a few drops of water—but someone must have read "The Raven" to it for it certainly quoth "Nevermore".

Then there was a culvert built alongside Bellville street near the I. C., with every indication that something was to be done to improve that disgrace across the ditch there. It is now worse than ever if such a thing were possible.

And to get out in the country—as far as the infamous Tribune Hollow—there was some fine work done there last summer by our genial road engineer. But a few hundred dollars more would have fixed it so that the work would have lasted for years. Instead it is now in a deplorable shape and by spring will be as bad as it ever was.

Would it not be better to attempt less and finish more?

Broken-Nose Roche

By EVELYN LEE

(© 1920, Western Newspaper Union.)

He was the homeliest man that had ever set foot within the precincts of Hopedale. He was frowzy, bristling, rough spoken, made first, last, and all the time for the one place in the town where strong drink was dispensed, and about lived there for two weeks until his money was all gone.

Somehow, somewhere he had met with a defacing contact that had broken his nose. The facial effect was hideous when he was under the influence of stimulants, and he was even an object of mingled pity and aversion when in his right mind. In his cups he boasted valiantly of a set to with a noted professional pugilist.

"A big one, like Dan Beaver, would naturally leave a lifetime mark on me," he observed. "That is why I have gone by the name of Broken Nose Roche, but I gave him worse in return. He'll never see again from one eye, and he'll chew his food on one jaw."

One day Roche hung around the drinking place without money. The next they shut the door against him. He wandered disconsolately down the street, shattered in nerves from his protracted carousal. As he neared a pretentious mansion near the edge of the town he saw no movement of life about the place, entered its gate and threw himself upon the ground where it was shaded and went to sleep.

He awoke to observe seated in lawn chairs a little distance from him an old man and a woman, seemingly of middle age, and, he decided, a daughter. She was crying, and her tones were broken as she said:

"Norman is gone for good, father and oh! how we shall miss him! To think of such a loss, after ten years!"

"And his value," added the old gentleman. "There aren't half a dozen dogs of his breed in the country. Followed some farmer, though, probably, and we may trace him yet. Ah, our tramp friend has awakened. Looks pretty seedy. Perhaps hungry."

"I was thinking of that," answered Leebia Morris. "Tell him to come around to the kitchen, father, and I'll prepare a lunch for him."

Roche stolidly accepted the invitation of Robert Morris to partake of a meal, but something better in his nature aroused as the daughter met him at the back door and pointed to a table upon which she had set a tempting meal.

"I won't soon forget your kindness," said Broken-Nose Roche, hat in hand as he left the place. Tramping on eight miles down the dusty road he came across a fellow tramp like himself. The latter had a magnificent dog of the collie species held by a rope, and was jubilant over the fact that a ready purchaser might be found and the proceeds invested in creature comforts at the next town. Roche was soon made aware that it was the missing canine belonging to the lady who had been so kind to him. He gave the thief a couple of vigorous cuffs and started back for the Morris home.

Miss Morris was in ecstasies over the recovery of a cherished pet, learned the particulars of its recovery, and with her father showed an interest in Roche. The result was that Mr. Morris offered Roche steady work as a gardener if he would eschew drinking and bad companions, and the wanderer settled down in his first permanent position. At the end of a year Roche was saving money and was, indeed, a striking example of a brand saved from the burning. He occupied the front apartment of a pretty little four-room lodge at one side of the mansion, originally built for his predecessor, who had a large family. One day he remarked to Mr. Morris:

"I've sort of made good with you, haven't I? There's one thing I told you wrong when I first came here. It was about my broken nose, my brag about a tussle with a pugilist is a fiction. I got that mark from my wife's brother."

"Then you are a married man!" exclaimed Mr. Morris in surprise.

"I was once, but I reckon the wife and two children never think of me now. I abused my wife and wasted the money that should have brought them comfort. One day her brother gave me the punishment of my life, and I left for good."

Mr. Morris led Roche to tell more of his past life, the location of his former home and all that. He held many secret consultations with his daughter. The latter went away for a few days. Immediately after that Mr. Morris had the lodge renovated from one end to the other and furnished up the vacant rooms.

"It looks as if you are going to get a new gardener in my place," said Roche. "Maybe I don't suit."

"That score needn't disturb you," replied Mr. Morris. "I was thinking that maybe some time you might make an effort to win back your family."

"Oh! I've been too bad for that," declared Roche, and turned away with tears in his eyes.

A month later Mr. Morris sent him to a city in another county to look up and order some new farming machinery. Returning, as Roche passed the lodge he noticed two little children playing on its porch. Then from the doorway stepped a woman who turned a shining face toward him with hands extended.

"Abner!" she said simply, and Broken-Nose Roche knew that this beautiful spot was to be his, while life lasted, a paradise regained.

A Business Problem

By CECILLE LANGDON

(© 1918, Western Newspaper Union.)

"Any husband who tries to tear a wife away from all the home ties she cherishes is selfish and unmanly!" "And any wife who will hold back from her husband's chances of making something of himself is a foe direct in the household!"

It was not the first time that Rodney and Esther Mills had clashed, but on this occasion high words followed. They were at odds on a very vital subject. Ever since they married five years previous both had worked harmoniously, cheerfully behind their store counter, building up a moderately successful business. For a long time, however, Rodney had entertained dreams of spreading out and seeking a broader field of activity. The magnet city allured him. There had come along a man who was willing to buy him out at a good figure. The temptation was irresistible. Rodney consummated the deal without saying anything about it to anybody. When he made the dread announcement his wife was fairly prostrated.

In vain had he argued with her. She would admit that with their youth and industry they might score a success on a larger scale, but she absolutely refused to leave Woodville.

There was truth and sense in what she said, but Rodney was doggedly persistent now. The store was in other hands, he heard of a good business in the city for investment and was determined to have his way at any cost. The result was serious. Up to the last moment Esther refused to even discuss the situation. Rodney went away alone, grimly resolved to get re-established in a prominent way, and wrote for his wife to come to him. He received in reply a definite announcement that Esther would not join him at any time and their paths parted then and there.

Twice Rodney wrote again, but he received no reply. He became engrossed in business and his heart hardened as he considered himself the aggrieved one. When he got his affairs in fair running order he was half minded to return to Woodville and make a final appeal to the wife he missed greatly.

He now realized how helpful she had been to him. How began to unselfishly recognize that he had been dictatorial and self-willed at the cost of a love he really cherished. He inferred that all kinds of rumors as to his arbitrary course might have led to mean gossip and exaggerations, and for this reason he made up his mind finally to follow out the path he had chosen alone.

Every three months he sent his wife a check fairly awarding her half on what the investment of their money realized. For three years he was prosperous. Then brisk and unexpected competition in the neighborhood where he had established in business brought diminished trade and he broke down from worry and real cares. His physician sent him away for an absolute rest of two months, Rodney ordering his lawyer to liquidate the business which, except for the three good years, had turned out a failure.

Rodney, patched up in health but depressed and disappointed, returned from his brief exile to find that his business assets had just about paid all debts and left a mere modicum of surplus. He had serious thoughts of taking a position as a salaried employee, and then the home longing prompted him to pay a surreptitious visit to Woodville.

He arranged it so that he arrived there at dusk and kept out of the view of old friends and acquaintances until the stores were closed and few people generally were stirring about. When he had left the town his wife had gone to make her home with her mother and sisters. His ideas were vague as to his chances of getting a glimpse of Esther. The store he had sold out was located on his way to the supposed home of his wife. He was naturally curious to view it. As he neared it he observed that an addition had been built on and the show window revealed an increased stock over the old times. He was puzzled, even started as he chanced to notice the sign over the door. It was "Mills & Co."

A light showed in a window at the rear of the store. He stole around to the side. There in one of the comfortably furnished living rooms was his wife seated at a desk, busy with some bookkeeping. Rodney understood now. She had in some way secured the business he had sold out and from all appearances was making a success of it. Timidly he knocked at the door. A moment later Esther confronted him at its threshold. "Can I come in?" he asked humbly, quivering all over with suppressed emotion. Esther, too, was vastly moved, but she suppressed any exhibition of the fact.

"No one has a better right," she answered steadily, and opened wide the door. "The money you sent me helped buy back the old business. I am simply a caretaker in your behalf." "You mean—you mean," he quivered, "that I would be welcome here?" "You are very welcome," she said simply.

"Home!" he aspirated, sinking wearily, but oh! so contentedly into a chair. "Esther, can you forgive and forget?"

"Both," answered this peerless one of womankind.

This new Goldwyn play is perhaps the most original that has ever been shown on the screen. There are two reasons for this. One is its plot; the other is its star. Will Rogers in "Almost a Husband" will please you as you have never been pleased before. He is refreshing. He is convincing. He is really funny—you'll say so.

CONVICT BUILT ROADS

The letter of former chaplain Walter Q. Vreeland of the Frankfort Penitentiary to chairman H. Greene Garrett of the State Highway Commission has called the attention of the State, in a dignified and fair-minded way, to the evils of trying to build roads with convicts. Dr. Vreeland's protest has met with speedy and generous approval of the press of the State. Dr. Vreeland's argument, in favor of keeping prisoners behind prison walls until they are eligible for parole, is unanswerable. They should be kept there for the public protection as well as for their own protection. The effort to build our roads with convict labor is a stupendous blunder. The officials at Frankfort should heed the protest and end the system. The law does not require that convicts be worked outside of prison walls and it should not be permitted.

The bride is an accomplished young lady and has a host of friends. The groom is a son of Frank Hamby and is employed as a clerk in the J. R. Sowder Meat Market.

Mr. and Mrs. Hamby will reside in Marion.

Illinois Central Reviews Transportation Conditions of 1920

The railways of the United States have just emerged from a year of unprecedented difficulties. With a transportation plant unequal to the demands placed upon it, they made a record of which railway men are justly proud, and in which forward looking citizens generally may well feel a pride.

Commercial requirements were the greatest in history. Because of a strike at the coal mines in November and December, 1919, at the beginning of 1920 the country was 45,000,000 tons short of its normal supply of coal. Other commodities in great quantities awaited shipment. A flood of traffic was turned upon the railways.

The railways had suffered from the war. New equipment had not been purchased in sufficient quantities. Old equipment had not been adequately maintained. Cars had been scattered broadcast over the country. The building of yards and sidings and new mileage had been interrupted. Adequate rates had not been assured. Wages, material, costs and taxes had mounted to new levels. A switchmen's strike, tying up terminal freight movement, occurred in April and made its lingering effects felt throughout the early summer.

Facing the great demands for transportation, with many obstacles against them, the railways accomplished a task that seems almost miraculous. The danger of a coal famine was averted. Necessary traffic was moved. A steadily increasing record of efficiency was built up, week by week and month by month, exceeding all previous records of railway history. The peak of the car shortage was passed early in September. Late in November a car surplus actually existed. The supply of transportation now exceeds the demand for the first time in five years.

Many predict a business revival in 1921, an optimism that seems altogether justified. If the predicted business revival materializes, it will make a heavy demand upon the railways. We believe the railways will be able to meet a larger business than they moved during the record-breaking past year. New equipment will be in service and old equipment will be in better condition. Railway workers are developing the old spirit of loyalty and efficiency conceived upon a new foundation of public service. More adequate rates have been granted. The public is taking a more intelligent interest in railway affairs. Lessons in co-operation have been learned.

It is well, however, for those who will make heavy demands upon traffic during the year to anticipate those demands as early as possible, now that the railways are in a position to handle all traffic offered them. Material which can be transported now in anticipation of later demands should be transported in order to distribute the traffic burden more evenly.

We of the Illinois Central System are proud to have shared in the 1920 record of the railways of the country. Our best efforts will now be put forth in helping to make the record of the railways for 1921 even more creditable than was the record of 1920.

Constructive criticism and suggestions are invited.

President, Illinois Central Railroad Company

Fall of the Bastille.

Just ten days after the celebration of our own Independence day, France and all her children, no matter what part of the world they may be, mark with peculiar emphasis the 14th of July, which day has often been termed in America "the French Fourth of July." It was on July 14, 1789, the storming of the Bastille took place.

Arctic Cold Misunderstood.

There is a great deal of misunderstanding relative to the cold of the Arctic regions. The absence or presence of water and altitude are important factors in determining temperature. As the altitude increases going North, the bite of the weather is lessened so that there is little or no inconvenience to be experienced from the cold.

The Lookout

By JESSIE ETHEL SHERWIN

(© 1920, Western Newspaper Union)

"I've got the position! Oh! the rare, dear, good fortune of it all!" Alice Weston burst in upon her father aflame with excitement and delight. She had hurried all the way from the life saving station down at Cape Gray, two miles distant, and had run from the old lighthouse clear to the little cottage where John Weston sat reading a book.

"Good for you, Bright Eyes," he enthused, bestowing a glad glance upon her. "Let us hear all about it."

"You know, we heard how, during the summer season, the cape life-saving crew have planned to put a lookout signal station at the old lighthouse, so as to cover pleasure boats and bathers in this direction. The chief of the crew was awfully good to me. He inquired all about both of us, told me what I would have to do, and by Monday the telephone and the signals will be here for us, and I am to begin my duties. Oh, papa! think of it! Sixty dollars a month!"

Alice's eyes sparkled and those of her father filled with grateful tears. For over five years life had gone hard with those worthy and deserving souls, for Mr. Weston was too old to take parties out in his boat.

"We are to keep your boat ready for use," Alice went on, "and they will pay you ten dollars a month for what use it may have. They expect us to find some one to be within call of our station, ready to start out if any accident occurs on this side of the cape. You see, in most cases what comes under my notice I phone to the cape, but if there is a capsized boat or an accident to a swimmer near us, some one must be ready to start right out to the rescue."

The next morning a bronzed, hardy looking young man appeared at the cottage. He had heard of the position and had been directed to Mr. Weston by a neighbor. At a glance Alice discerned that the applicant was no ordinary workman. He simply stated that he had met with a serious reverse of fortune, had owned a yacht once, knew all about water craft and would be glad to secure the position offered. The life saving service chief appeared on the scene a little later, to look after some repairs in the tower that was to be the daily home of Alice, and she introduced North, whose services were at once arranged for.

Monday morning Alice reached the tower to find its top circular room newly whitewashed, the phone in and the place swept out and dusted. A pretty bouquet of wild flowers showed in a tin cup. North had arrived in advance of her.

"You worked all this magic!" said Alice, with grateful eyes.

"That ought to be part of my duty every morning," declared North. "See," and he pointed through the door of an alcove. "I've arranged for board. As to the lodging, could anything be better?" and he indicated a hammock swing across window openings where the sea breeze came in fresh and bracing.

Incidentally Alice learned that North had been left quite a fortune, but had been defrauded out of it by schemers. He had come down to the cape to sail a yacht for a very wealthy gentleman, but the latter had been taken ill.

"It left me stranded," he explained, "but I'll be able to get along here on what the position pays me for the rest of the season."

He was courteous, well read, refined in manner. During the first month of service he had saved a struggling and exhausted bather who had ventured too far out in the surf, and one stormy afternoon both he and Alice took the oars and reached a capsized boat just in time to rescue two young girls clinging to it. He had gone to take a report to headquarters one day when storm signals were up, and, returning, instead of coming up to the lookout, he hurried to the boat. Rowing the oars vigorously, North drove forward diagonally in the direction of the cape. Soon, Alice, her eyes to the telescope, divined his purpose. He was cutting across the track of a light craft holding one man. As he reached it Alice uttered a sharp scream. A puff of smoke and then the faint echo of a pistol report told her of a desperate encounter. The boats were side by side. She saw North, who had fallen, arise, shift his oar, strike at the man who had fired at him and spring beside him. The shore boat floated away. The smaller one, both men apparently helpless, drifted unguided.

Alice sensed a tragedy. She acted like the true daughter of the sea that she was. In a few moments she was garbed in a light bathing suit. She was a superb swimmer, but fairly exhausted as she clambered into the drifting boat. Both of its occupants lay senseless. She got them ashore, called her father and within an hour North was able to tell his story.

"I heard in the town of a great jewel robbery at the hotel," he explained, "and noticed that suspicious boat. It contained the stolen plunder." The thief was taken in charge by officers sent for. There came back a phone message. "There is one thousand dollars reward waiting here for somebody."

Of course the "somebody" was Gerard North, and his first investment, after a month's nursing by the solicitous Alice, was an engagement ring.

Oh, Well, That's Different

The Message Bearer

By T. B. ALDERSON

© 1925 Western Newspaper Union

"They tell me you are going down to Leesville, Dacre."

"Why, yes, I expect to visit the old folks for a week or two."

"Would you deliver a message for me to a friend there?"

"Certainly," responded Lynn Dacre, frank, clear-eyed, accommodating, something of a contrast to Marvin Britt on this special occasion who, while a thoroughly good fellow, was just now chuckling secretly over a trick, or rather a double trick he was playing. Innocently enough, however, he tendered Dacre a sealed envelope. The latter paled, then he reddened, then he observed confusedly:

"Is it just the right thing for me to do? It is for Miss Wanda Berteau, I see, and you know—"

"Just how matters stand, Dacre. See here, we are good friends and don't have to mind matters. You and I appeared in the run for her favor and I won out because you were possessed of the modest opinion that you were not good enough for her. In my humble estimation you are worthy of the attention and confidence of the best woman in the world. Between you and I, Wanda and I are having some serious correspondence. Why shouldn't you be my message bearer? You would like to see Wanda again, wouldn't you?"

"I can't deny it, but strained relations, you see," floundered Dacre.

"Nonsense! No embarrassment is necessary. She values you as a friend and something more, perhaps. You never obtrude your silent devotion upon her. She will be glad to see you, I am sure."

Marvin Britt had indeed outdistanced Lynn Dacre in the race for the exclusive regard of Wanda Berteau. That young lady had come to Brandon to enhance the adoration of both. Britt made furious love. Dacre dropped out of the race feeling that he was no match for the most brilliant, if slightly, young man in the district. When Wanda returned to her home town it was current gossip that she and Britt were engaged.

Dacre left his friend slightly flustered. Miss Berteau lived at the town where he was going, and he had hoped to catch at least a fleeting glimpse of the only woman he had ever loved during his visit, but would never have ventured to obtrude himself upon her presence.

Dacre made his journey and about all he had in his mind was the prospective call upon Miss Berteau. He did not put this into effect until the second day after his arrival. With some misgiving as to how the young lady might receive him he rang the double bell of the Berteau home. Wanda was at home alone and came to the door. Perhaps she craved any companionship to alleviate the monotony of her loneliness. Perhaps she was heartily glad to see some one from the town where it was considered she had lost her heart. At all events she greeted Dacre like an old and dear friend. She invited him in and acted as if this was a desirable preface to a leisurely visit.

"I come at the request of Mr. Britt," spoke Dacre, but at this Wanda's brows met in what seemed to be pretty indifference, and she said:

"Tell me about my girl friends, and the town generally."

So they chatted, and when Dacre arose to leave he sighed gently, for it had indeed been to him a rapturous hour. Wanda did not open the letter he had brought during his stay. In fact Dacre was somewhat surprised to note how carelessly she tossed it aside. She did not ask him to call again but the next day he met her on the street.

Wanda shook hands with him gently. "I hope you will not forget us during your brief stay," she remarked. "My sisters will be home from a visit day after tomorrow, and if you are the excellent tennis player you were I am sure you will add to the pleasure of the afternoon."

There was a change in Wanda that Dacre could not help but notice. There seemed to be a latent excitement or emotion underlying all she said, as though her mind was constrained yet filled with a sentiment of greater kindness towards him. Each day after that she drew closer and nearer to him. The one upon which he bade her farewell she asked him a question. It was:

"Would you object to conveying a note to Mr. Britt for me?"

"Certainly not," replied Dacre, and he did not soon forget the probing, vivid look she bestowed upon him when he left her.

"Read that," said Britt, in a careless, off handed way when Dacre handed him Wanda's letter the next day. It read:

"You are entirely right in judging that our brief companionship was not to me an episode of love. As you owe the same conviction as to your own state of feeling, let us forget all about it."

And then Britt showed Dacre a copy of the letter he had sent to Miss Wanda Berteau. It told of his simple friendly feeling towards her and added:

"My message bearer loved you before I ever saw you. He loves you now—a worthy, loyal fellow who will deserve the reciprocal devotion you may experience."

And putting the loose ends of a discolored romance together, Dacre believed that there was a hope for the future.
