GIVENS RESTAURANT FINDS A LOCATION

Arrangements are now being made in the Postal Telegraph building in Evansville, Ind., that Guy Givens may occupy part of it with his restaurant.

There is perhaps no other business that has been so badly missed since the big fire as has this restaurant business of Guy's. Always a popular place and well patronized, the public who found it necessary to get away from home have been considerably discommoded by the destruction of the former location.

Although the new place may not be as convenient as the old one, the quality of the food served and the fact that Guy is not afraid to let the people know that he has something for them through the columns of the Press will no doubt soon get him in the habit of going a little out of their way to have their hunger taken care of.

Any write up of this place of business would be incomplete without mention of Mrs. Guy. No doubt her personal supervision of the preparation of all the food served has had a great deal to do with the popularity of the place.

HONORED IN MARITTA GA.

Mrs. Aubrey Cannan, of this city, who is visiting her sister, Mrs. R. W. Lewis in Maritita, Ga., has been the guest of honor at several entertainments in that city. The following items of interest are gleaned from the social columns of the Maritita (Ga.) Journal:

Mrs. Clarence Power entertained pleasantly at Bridge on Monday afternoon, for Mrs. Cannan, of Kentucky, the house-guest of Mrs. R. W. Lewis. Delicious refreshments were enjoyed after the game.

Mrs. John Collins entertained at Bridge on Friday afternoon, for Mrs. Aubrey Cannan, of Kentucky, the guest of Mrs. R. W. Lewis.

PROPOSED NEW THEATRE

Plans are now being drawn for the erection of a new theatre with a capacity of six hundred to be located either on Main or Belleville Street.

The plan will be of the arcade style, with a front of fifty feet and a depth of at least one hundred and twenty-seven feet.

Entrance will be made through seven stores or shops made located deep, these stores will be connected with the theatre by means of a tunnel extending under the theatre auditorium.

The entrance hall and theatre will be on the same level as the street and no steps or raise will be encountered in entering the main auditorium. Large entrances and exits will be provided and the construction will be practically fire proof. The ticket office will be located in the center of the hall with large double doors on either side. Stairways to the balcony will be installed just inside of entrance while the stairway in the offices, which are to be located over the stores, will be found in the main hall to the right of the other stairs. Rest rooms are to be installed under the stairways on both sides and in the main hall. Lodges or boxes will be built in the front row of the balcony. A stage of ample size to accommodate road shows is to be provided. The steam heating plant for the entire building will be installed under the stage.

We hope to have a modern up to date theatre and building which the citizens of Marion and Crittenden county can be proud of. While the theatre will be larger than necessary for moving pictures it will be none too large for public gatherings and the town and county needs such an auditorium. The public is further assured of having nothing but clean first class shows.

There will be better equipment than has ever been used in a theatre in Marion before. It will be as good as the best. There will be two machines in this new theatre and the show will be as one continuous reel from first to last. This will eliminate the wait between the reels.

It is hoped that the new STRAND will be ready for the grand opening by June 1.

DIES IN EVANSVILLE

Mr. Frank Doss, 37 years of age, died at his home in Evansville, Saturday at 10 A. M. The body was brought to Marion Monday morning and taken to the home of Mrs. J. R. Summerville, his sister, where the funeral services were held. The remains were accompanied by several railroad men who had worked with him for years who acted as pallbearers.

The funeral services were held at 1 P. M. Monday, directly afterward the remains were interred in the new Cemetery. The floral offerings at the grave were beautiful and impressive. He was paid tribute in this way by his fellow workmen of the I. C. Railroad.

The late Mr. Doss was a son of Mr. C. E. Doss of this city. Besides his father and sister, he leaves a wife and three sons, the eldest 17 and the youngest four.

He was reared and educated in Marion. He entered the employ of the I. C. R. R. Co. fifteen years ago and has been with them since. His wife was Miss Lena McNeely, they were married in 1902 and have resided in Evansville during the past six years. He joined the church at Marion when a small boy.

Mr. Doss was the victim of a paralytic stroke the 31 day of August from which he never recovered.

The funeral services were conducted by Rev. G. P. Dillon, pastor of the Methodist church of this city.

SURPRISE BIRTHDAY DINNER

Mr. J. P. Easley of near Shady Grove was given a surprise on January 23, it being his forty-fifth birthday. His friends and neighbors gathered and gave him a birthday dinner. When he was called to the dining room he found the table extended full length and loaded with everything good to eat.

Those present to enjoy the repast were: Mr. and Mrs. Ezra McDowell and little daughter; Mr. and Mrs. A. F. Easley and Roy; Mr. and Mrs. Oscar Leet and son, Carlos; Mr. and Mrs. Lee Philpott and children, Olin, Clyde, Golda, Zula and Roberta; Mrs. W. R. Wilson; Mr. and Mrs. Fred Easley and daughter; Mr. and Mrs. John Wood and children, Denner and Verna May; Mrs. D. Davis and son, Earl; Messrs. Jesse Leet, Ormand and Raymond Davis; Misses Nannie Wood, Anna and Lucella Easley and Urabelle Davis.

The day was a pleasant one to all and as the visitors left they wished him many more happy birthdays.

THE BIGGEST AD EVER

In this issue will be found the largest advertisement ever carried by a newspaper in Western Kentucky. It announces the largest sale ever held in this county and one that will probably not be equaled for years.

Mr. Carnahan is one of the most progressive merchants of this county and realizes the worth of advertising. He has a large quantity of first class merchandise and believes in letting the people know about it.

This sale is being held to dispose of his stock that was slightly damaged from removal, fire and smoke of the recent conflagration.

TRAYLOR-McCONNELL

Last Thursday afternoon Mr. Reen McConnell and Miss Zoa Traylor, both of Caldwell county, drove to Marion and were quietly united in the Holy Rights of Matrimony by Rev. U. G. Hughes.

The groom is the son of R. A. McConnell and wife of the Creswell section and is a prosperous young farmer and a fine young man.

The bride is a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. G. F. Traylor of near Princeton. She is a beautiful and accomplished young lady. They are both very popular young people in their county.

They spent the night at the Crittenden Hotel and returned in the morning to surprise their many friends.

CARD OF THANKS

We wish to thank our neighbors and friends for the kindness and help shown us in the sickness and death of our father, D. W. DeBoe. May God bless each one of us prayer.

SCHOOL OPENS FOR SECOND SEMESTER

Monday morning the Marion City Schools opened up for the second term. New classes were organized to take care of pupils who have completed the common school studies and who wish to enter high school for the spring work. Several students have already entered and more are expected.

Arrangements are being made so that girls and boys from the country can secure room and board at a reasonable rate.

FARM BUREAU MEETS

In a call meeting of the Farm Bureau held in the Court House Monday afternoon the Agricultural interests of the county were placed at the stake. The primary consideration of the organization was the election of officers for the year 1921. Prior to the convention however, it seems that a few men had been considering matters of considerable weight and had come to the meeting with a determination. With this in the offing, the election was attended to without delay and the following men placed at the helm: J. A. Hill, President; Joe Dean, Vice President; W. O. Moore, Secretary and J. V. Threlkeld, Treas.

On motion the election of several Directors was postponed until Tuesday, February 1st, at which time Pres. Hill will submit the names for consideration.

Immediately upon the conclusion of the election the several men with the single determination began the telling shots resultant from their outside caucus. The Farm Bureau as organized in this county the third day of July of last year, was to serve a purpose, and as such has been a failure. It was to have brought those of us who are interested in agriculture together for the purpose of promoting the development of the most profitable and permanent system of this interest; the most wholesome and satisfactory living conditions; the highest ideals in the home and community life and a genuine interest in the farm business and rural life on the part of the boys and girls. In this it has not succeeded. A few of us have derived benefit from the organization; a saving of dollars in fact, but as we were so aptly told, the real object of the Farm Bureau has not been attained.

With facts so truly stated the meeting arose to the issue and after open discussion, authorized the President to appoint a campaign committee for the purpose of enlisting new members. This committee is to be possessed of powers to conduct such a campaign as will make the most astute politician green with envy; a campaign the like of which has never before swept this county; a campaign you farmers can not help being interested in, for it is for you and of you. Woman or man, watch the columns of this paper, watch your mail box, and above all WATCH YOUR STEP and don't fail to grasp this opportunity to get the real value of your produce; the necessities of your calling at their real value; and a better acquaintance with your neighbor. We will endeavor to reach you as speedily as possible with full information as to the functions of the Farm Bureau and the part you can play in it but don't wait. Make inquiry and find a member he will gladly tell all he knows. Better still, drop a request in the box addressed to W. O. Moore Secretary of the Farm Bureau, Marion, Ky., and he will immediately give you all possible information. Don't delay. Get in the job.

The next meeting of the Farm Bureau is called for Tuesday February 1st to meet in conjunction with the Fiscal Court. Matters of importance, namely the provision of a County Agent for this county, will be taken up and your presence is earnestly requested. Be at the Court House at 1 P. M. or before.

DIES IN EVANSVILLE

Mrs. Frank Butler, age 30, died Wednesday morning January 26, at the hospital in Evansville where she had been taken for treatment. The body was brought to Marion Thursday morning. Funeral arrangements have not yet been made.

Mrs. Butler is survived by her husband, Mr. Frank Butler, and three children, Ernest, James C., and Mildred Butler.

SOME NEW WORK

The Marion Electric Light and Ice Co. has in the past two months used several thousand feet of copper wire in extending its lines and in improving and strengthening those already up. A new street light was installed on North Main Street near Alvah Elder's new bungalow and one on West Poplar Street near Forrest Harris' new residence. The damage to the poles, wires and transformers during the recent fire was all repaired promptly and no customer was without lights a single night, temporary arrangements having been made for all until permanent repairs could be made.

Among those for whom new lights have been installed recently are: T. J. McConnell, Moore and Daughtrey, Mrs. T. J. Alexander, Mrs. Julia, Clark, Grant Davidson, Loren Yates, L. Clark, S. Clark, Mrs. Felix Perry, R. H. Enoch, Hugh Bennett, B. Boswell, M. H. Cannan Co., Guy Givens Restaurant, W. E. Cox, Dr. Clement's office, A. C. Moore's office, P. Fablick, George Glore, Alvah Elder, T. A. Frazer, J. Kimsey, J. LaRue, Ed Perry, Forest Harris, M. Jackson, Mrs. McFee, W. G. Patterson, Annie Stephenson, C. A. Taylor, D. Travis, Mrs. Bob Smith, and Mrs. Josie Worley. Meters have been installed for the following patrons who were previously on flat rates: J. M. Belt, Sam Brown, Mrs. Alexander, G. P. Dillon, Prof. Jagers, Albert Shelby and some others whose names we do not now recall.

WE HAD IT THE WRONG WAY

A short time ago the Press published a story to the effect that the Crittenden county Fiscal Court had voted down the proposition to pay half the cost of improving the Salem road out a ways from town.

We have been reliably informed that this did not come to a vote, owing to the fact that the county attorney explained to the magistrates that the county was not in any shape financially to do this work at present. John A. is not in any way opposed to fixing roads, but he don't want the magistrates to spend money that isn't.

RESTAURANT LOOTED

The restaurant and grocery of W. E. Cox was broken into Saturday night and several articles were stolen. It is reported that the thief or thieves gained access to the building by way of one of the rear windows. From what could be learned the stolen articles consisted of some meat, canned goods and flour. The miscreant wrapped these in a tablecloth and departed. The robbery was not discovered until Sunday morning. No clue was found which would lead to the discovery of the robber.

Someone also attempted to force an entrance to the grocery of R. E. Wilborn near the depot, Sunday night but was unsuccessful.

RESPECTED CITIZEN DIES

J. W. Brown, an aged and respected citizen of the Francis section died at his home Friday morning, Jan. 21. He was buried at Matthews cemetery. Funeral services were conducted by Rev. Hosea C. Paris of Marion.

Mr. Brown is survived by eight children. He was a member and deacon of the Caldwell Springs Baptist church.

OUR FARM BUREAU

Elsewhere in this paper will be found a report of the meeting of the Crittenden County Farm Bureau. Wideawake men and men interested in the betterment of Crittenden county were elected as officers of this organization.

It is to the best interest of not only every farmer in Crittenden but to every citizen of this county that we interest ourselves in this movement and boost.

The next meeting will be held on February 1st and everyone is urged to be present. For further information call or write W. O. Moore, Secretary of the Farm Bureau.

Rev. James F. Price will go to Warren county this week to look after the offerings for the Boards in some of the vacant churches. He will preach at Rockfield next Saturday and Sunday.

DEFINITE DATE FOR WOMANLESS WEDDING

The womanless wedding to be staged under the direction of the Marion Improvement Club for the benefit of the School House Repair Fund will be staged on the night of Friday, February 4th at eight o'clock in the school auditorium.

Many new and unusual features will be a part of the evening's entertainment. While nothing definite in the way of a cast of characters has been announced you can just imagine how J. H. Orme would look with a low neck dress with a train or even dressed as a cute little girl bearing a bouquet of onions. Possibly T. H. Cochran will be chosen to act as the blushing bride or maybe the glad father giving away the bride. And there is a possibility that A. C. Moore will enter into the spirit of an evening's fun and render a vocal solo entitled "Here Comes the Bride." L. E. Guess has promised to sing a tenor solo. Joe Bourland is to insure that a large crowd will be present.

"Dude" Pierce has backed out in being the groom, according to rumor. He probably would if Creed Taylor or W. T. McConnell would give the bride away but it is suspected that this would be too much to ask of them. W. O. Tucker says he might give something away but it is hardly fair to ask him to owing to the loss he sustained in the recent fire.

The preachers are not going to be overlooked in looking for talent. Rev. Dillon may be dressed up in knickerbockers and Windsor tie to be the flower girl or something.

Such plans as above outlined have not been authoritatively announced but they may happen. It will be hard to say just what you will see until you get there and see it.

Cost you something of course. But it costs you to eat but most of you try and eat with some regularity. Even newspaper men have been known to eat at times—when invited out.

Anyway this big affair will be held on Friday night, Feb. 4.

MRS. GLORE DIES

Mrs. Minor Glore died at her home Monday morning January, 24, of cancer from which she had suffered for sometime. She is survived by her husband, a builder and contractor of Marion, and nine children. Funeral services were conducted at the residence by Rev. Henry V. Escott. Interment followed at the City Cemetery.

NEWS IN BRIEF

The annual fund for free distribution of seed was eliminated from the agricultural bill by the house sub-committee last week.

Two tobacco barns were burned in the Huffman Mill section, near Hopkinsville Friday night. The fires were supposed to have been of incendiary origin.

Fifty-seven recruits have enlisted in the U. S. Army at the Paducah recruiting station since January 1. Only eleven of these men had seen service before.

The residence of Geo. B. Christian, next door to the home of President-elect Harding, and used by him as headquarters was burned Sunday. Campaign documents were saved.

James Childers of Louisville was driving a car across the K. and Ind. Bridge when an automobile struck the cow. The animal was hurled against the bridge and pinioned Childers to the rail with its horns. A severe blow had to be dealt on the cow's head in order to release the man. Childers was not injured.

Night-riders appeared in the Burley section of Bath and Fleming counties Saturday night and Sunday morning. About 35, masked men visited farmers of that section and threatened them with personal violence if they raised tobacco next year. About fifteen farmers were visited.

U. S. dry agents report that they have no intention of starting a drive against makers of "Home Brew." The principal reason, it is said, is because they are too busy with greater offenders.

A GREAT MEETING

From every viewpoint the meeting at the First Baptist Church is great. The preaching is all done by the pastor, Rev. W. P. Meroney and without a single exception every sermon has been of a high order, free from sectarianism and in demonstration of the Holy Spirit and Power.

The music has been in charge of Mr. J. A. Brown, ably assisted by a large choir made up of members of the choir of that church and the other churches of the city. That is one thing Marion is famous for, talented singers. Mr. Brown is a man of fine spirit and possesses a melodious voice.

The results of the meeting are far reaching. Many have professed faith in Christ and a large number united with the Baptist church and no doubt other churches will have additions from the meeting, besides a number have renewed their faith.

Inclement weather does not effect the attendance, large crowds go day and night. Marion will be a better town to live in because of the meeting.

BAKER SCHOOL CLOSSES

Miss Mayme Cleghorn closed a very successful school at Baker January 19, 1921 with an interesting program.

Six pupils passed the examination for promotion to High School; Nannie Williams, Edward Samuels, Velma Newcom, Virginia Jennings, Audra Newcom and Loraine Samuels.

At the close of the program the teacher presented the graduates their promotion certificates then Edward Samuels told what great work the Baker school had done the fall and winter 1920-21 and how the school appreciated their teacher.

Nannie Williams, Esther Duncan, Aubrey Samuels and Byron Samuels received prizes for the most head-marks and Esther Duncan also received a prize for regular attendance.

Many of the patrons were present at the closing exercises with well filled baskets and Miss Cleghorn furnished the candy and Mr. Curtis O'Neal took his graphophone over and furnished the music that was enjoyed by all.

THE STRANGE GIRL

By MILDRED WHITE.

(Copyright, 1920, Western Newspaper Union.)

The women guests were chatting on the veranda of Claremont house as the "strange girl" approached.

"The Strange Girl" is the name they gave the little creature, gossiping among themselves concerning the affairs of folks who patronized this exclusive Woodside inn. Nan humming softly, and unmoved if aware of their hostility, changed her intention of passing among them and made her way in her checked gingham frock to a rear door. She carried a hamper in her arms and waved aside a friendly attendant who would have relieved her of the burden. Mrs. Van Vout leaped excitedly toward her neighbor.

"It is my opinion," she said, "that the girl is working out her board here—a rural relative or something of the sort of Manager Hastings, else why should she be allowed to eat at the guest tables in the great dining room?"

"I will tell you something," she said. "This morning as I went out early to the garage with my husband—we were going away in his car—there, back in the barnyard, was your strange girl in her short gingham dress, feeding the chickens."

"Really?" Mrs. Van Vout exclaimed. "Chickens?" laughed Madame Rensaler. "I must go and tell Homer," Miss Van Vout said gleefully, and was off. A tall man, who had been silently smoking a cigar around the bend of the veranda, arose placidly. How they picked her to pieces, the gentle, shy creature who slipped in and out through all their display so unobtrusively.

"Tends to her own darned little business, if it is feeding chickens," he muttered, and strode hastily past the rocking chairs and across the lawn.

"Such an interesting personality!" Mrs. Van Vout whispered as he passed; "decidedly western, of course, but picturesque."

"It's his money, my dear, that is picturesque," Madame Rensaler dryly remarked. "They say this Jim Brent has made his millions."

The westerner reached the barnyard as the strange girl, Nan, was bending over two white hens hungrily engaged in disposing of their dinner. She had loosened the tight-placed braids from her head, and they fell rebelliously waving, red gold, to her waist. Startled, her soft eyes glanced up at him.

"Say," Jim Brent said awkwardly, "let me do that for you while you go in and get on that white dress for dinner. The bell's going to ring in a minute."

The girl smiled. "Why, that's nice of you," she said, "but I can't trust Biddy's feeding, or Jerry's, to another person. You see"—she caressed the white fowls—"they are about all I have to love. I brought them with me."

"Brought them?" gasped Jim; "from your home farm?"

Nan arose, straightening her gingham skirts.

"I haven't any home or folks," she said wistfully.

He waited later until the strange girl was properly seated at her own place in the great dining room. Then Jim Brent crossed the floor and paused with a bow of deference before her.

"I wonder," he asked, "if you'd let me sit here with you. I am lonely and I reckon you are. They"—he motioned toward the fashionable assembled throng—"they don't fit, some way. Hastings will tell you that I am all right."

"And I wish," Jim Brent was saying to Nan the following morning, "that you'd let me carry your hamper for you to—wherever you are going. Wherever you go every day you work too hard. You looked white and tired yesterday when you returned, and your gingham dress was all torn. "Nan—little girl"—big Jim gulped—"I wish you'd stop it all and come away with me. I love you, Nan."

The strange girl lifted a responsive white hen into the hamper. Then she closed its straw lid.

"Jim," she said quietly, "you may carry the hamper today, if you like, and come with me."

Recklessly she upturned the bright braids from about her head and let them fall to her waist, as together the two crossed the Claremont lawn.

"Did you ever?" cried Mrs. Van Vout. "Actually going marketing with her," Madame Rensaler said.

"I am taking you," Nan told the westerner as they walked, "to our moving picture camp just over the ridge. We are doing a dear farm picture there, Jim. I am 'Mollie of Mill Valley,' and an old white hen is about the only friend I have—that is, at first. I blossom out wonderfully toward the end of the play. The billboards say that here I am Nanette Willis at her best."

In the center of the woodland path Jim stood still.

"You," he said unbelievably, "Nanette Willis—and I never guessed. Used to follow your scenes just to see you smile. And I—dared to ask you—to be my wife. Great gosh!" he added sadly, "how you must laugh to your self."

"But I am not laughing, Jim," Nan said. "I'm a strange girl, you know, so sometimes when I feel happy I cry, almost. I want to cry now—with love for you, Jim, and happiness."

And when they went on again down the path the forgotten Biddy, escaping her hamper, sedately followed.

THE FORD BAND OF DESPERADOES

The story of Mike Fink and his band and the attack on the Light-ford is told in the last two installments. It shows to what dangers the early boatmen of the Ohio river, were exposed by the depredations of this Cave-in-Rock band of outlaws. Many other attacks on other boats were made which were never known to the public, owing to the fact that "dead men tell no tales."

As we have said, this band of murderers and outlaws did not confine their depredations to the river. They infested all the roads to and from what was then known as Barren Ferry. This is shown by the attack on Abram Wright, an account of which has already been given.

It happened one day that a traveler, whose identity has never been known, was journeying on the Fords Ferry road, somewhere near Pickens Hill. He was suddenly attacked from ambush and shot, falling fatally wounded by the roadside. Shortly afterward a woman, whose name the writer does not know, passing along the road was attracted by the groans of the wounded man. When she reached the man he told her he was a traveler, and that he was attacked by a band of highwaymen, shot and robbed of what money he had. He also told her that he was dying and begged her for a drink of water. Although there was a running stream not far away the woman had no bucket nor dipper in which to convey water from the spring and the nearest residence was miles away. But it seems, being a resourceful woman, she kindly pulled off one of her slippers and went to the spring and filled it with water to appease the thirst of the dying stranger. The man died soon afterward. He had no baggage and no mark of identification was found in his clothing. The woman notified the neighbors and the stranger was buried it is said, near the place at which he was killed. With the lapse of time the burial place has been forgotten. The names of the murdered man, his benefactress and his murderer will, perhaps, never be known until the day when the graves give up their dead.

The country now was becoming more thickly settled on both sides of the river. The settlers were a lot of brave and honest men, who believed in the "majesty of the law" and this made it harder for the outlaws to do their depredations unmolested. It was, incident, more than anything else, led to the death of Major James Ford, and the justice of the band Ford and his desperadoes from their rendezvous at Cave-in-Rock. This was the murder of Col. Vinson B. Simpson.

Col. Simpson was a prominent citizen of Crittenden county, and was well known on both sides of the river. He lived with his family, on his farm near where Rosebud church now stands. He also owned a farm on the other side of the river, in Hardin county, Illinois. It is said that he had rented from Major Ford the ferry at the crossing where the town of Fords Ferry now stands. It is also said that Col. Simpson and Major Ford had had a falling out of some kind and that in a personal combat between the two Ford had come out second best.

One day soon after this, Col. Simpson in company with his wife crossed the river to make a visit to his Illinois farm, which lay a few miles back of the river. How long they remained at the farm is not known, but on their return Col. Simpson was shot by someone hidden along the road, falling from his horse fatally wounded. He died of his injuries soon afterward. His murder aroused great indignation on both sides of the river. Whether Simpson or his wife or both recognized his assailant, or what the evidence was the writer does not know. But suspicion strongly pointed to Henry C. Shouse, a reputed member of the band of outlaws as being the murderer.

Soon after the death of Col. Simpson Shouse was arrested on this side of the river by officials of the law, charging him with the murder of Simpson, taken to Smithland and lodged in jail. While in jail it is either before or after his trial, Shouse made a confession, acknowledging the killing of Simpson and implicating Major Ford and other members of the band. This confession however if made, for some reason was never made public. Shouse was tried in the Livingston Circuit court, at what date is not known to the writer, though of course the records of the Circuit Clerk of that county will doubtless show, found guilty of willful murder, sentenced to death by the court and executed by hanging. Thus on member of the band at least had suffered for his crimes, the extreme penalty of the law. This it must be remembered, occurred before Crittenden was made a separate county and Marion established as the seat of government.

Col. Vinson B. Simpson was, as we said, an influential citizen of the county, widely known and respected. He had a large family and several of his descendants are now citizens of this county. He was the grandfather of Mrs. J. M. McChesney and the great-grandfather of Mrs. Chas. Daughtrey, both of this city.

After the murder of Col. Simpson and the execution of Shouse, things did not go well with the Cave-in-Rock band of desperadoes. Publicity then as now wielded a great beneficial and enlightening influence. Officials whose duty it was to uphold the "Majesty of the law" and the friends of the murdered man made an earnest effort to rid the country of highwaymen, robbers and murderers.

There are several versions as to how Major Ford met his death and at this date it is difficult to tell which version is the correct one. The late W. C. Watts a Livingstone County man and author of "Chronicles of a Kentucky Settlement," states that he was killed while setting on the porch of his own home by an unknown assailant, probably a member of the band of outlaws. From consulting some of our oldest citizens we are led to believe that this account is not in all respects correct. The reputed leader of the outlaw band was probably killed while away from home, at the river crossing, where now is located the town of Fords Ferry.

Jonathan Brown, William C. Blakely and Richard McConnell were residents of Hardin county, Illinois, just across the Ohio river and a few miles back from Cave-in-Rock. Their farms lay in the neighborhood of the one owned by Col. Simpson. They were all friends of, and one or more of them related by marriage to the murdered man. They therefore became active in aiding the authorities on this side of the river in bringing to justice, not only the murderer, but also the instigators of the crime.

One day while Brown and Blakely were over on this side of the river they met up with Major Ford somewhere near Fords Ferry and arrested him, whether with or without a warrant, is not known to us. Ford denied all knowledge of the crime, made no objection to going with them and said he was willing to be taken to Smithland for an examining trial.

He was taken to Fords Ferry by his captors, it is said, to the home of the ferryman, who occupied the house at that time is not known to the writer. It was late in the afternoon and while Ford, Brown and Blakely, with perhaps some members of the family occupying the house, were sitting on the porch it was announced that supper was served. Ford told the others that he was not hungry and that he did not wish any supper. The others then went into the dining room, leaving Ford alone on the porch. While they were eating the meal they heard a pistol shot, and rushing to the porch, they found Ford dead in his chair, having been shot through the heart. Who it was that fired the fatal shot has never been known to the public.

Thus passed away from earth Major Ford, a very bad man, or else a misguided one. As has been said, no incriminating evidence had ever been found against him by the upholders of the law. There were people then who believed he had no connection with the Cave-in-Rock band of outlaws, and there are a few persons who so believe today; but it was generally conceded that he was the leader of the noted band of desperadoes that has ever since borne his name. His family was highly respected, his son and daughter married into prominent families and were useful and prosperous citizens.

The body of Ford was buried in the family graveyard, near Hurricane, beside the grave of his oldest son. A monument was erected thereon which was inscribed the epitaph: "His benevolence caused orphans and widows to smile, and his firmness his enemies to tremble. He was envied while living and much slandered since death."

After the death of Major Ford the Cave-in-Rock outlaws apparently disbanded, as their depredations ceased. Today, as we have said, Cave-in-Rock is an up to date town, inhabited by useful and prosperous citizens; while the town of Fords Ferry, a few miles below and on this side of the river, is filled up with as good a lot of people as there are in Crittenden county, or elsewhere.

ELEVATED ROMANCE

By MILDRED WHITE.

(© 1920, Western Newspaper Union.)

Fate has strange ways of working. If John Harmon's mother had not sought him to go and look after his Aunt Henrietta, and if Janey's illness had not made it necessary for her to accept Aunt Caroline's hospitality, the two might never have met. The elderly ladies lived in a pleasant double house, in a pleasant shady city street.

They had rented their separate apartments in this house because of the advantage of close companionship, which ended in disappointment for both parties concerned because of the inopportune arrival of an oldtime lover, recently bereaved. The widower had years before, in his youth, been an object of rivalry between the maiden friends, and it was pardonable that his return should give a wrong construction.

Henry West had been guilty of indelicate love-making between the two in his single days and when Henry West, the widower, did not renew those earlier views after a succession of evening teas given on each side of the house Miss Henrietta and Miss Caroline blamed each other for the alienation of affection, and became enemies. Instead of friends. Long after the innocent unconscious widower had gone his way the ladies passed each other unrecognized in the garden which they shared, while an obstructing awning was placed between the two front porches.

John Harmon's mother, far away, being guilty concerned for her neglect of this older sister, and absorbed in the present by countless social clubs and teas, persuaded her big lawyer son to stop over for a time at Aunt Henrietta's and make sure that she was comfortable. John Harmon was obliged to go to Aunt Henrietta's city on a business trip. And just at this psychological time Janey Gray, far away in her distant village, recovering from an illness and needing care, accepted gratefully the invitation of her Aunt Caroline to visit and recuperate in the sunshine of her garden. It was there that John Harmon came upon Janey one glorious morning, as she sat beneath a spreading tree. And so inviting was the spot, and Janey and the morning altogether, that John lingered until noon and never enjoyed himself more in his life.

Time flew on golden wings, like the butterflies around the apple tree, while Janey Gray's pale cheeks grew round and pink and John Harmon allowed an unimportant affair like a case at law to wait. Then Aunt Caroline discovered them! And Aunt Caroline, if this might be possible, was just a little more unrelenting and a little more revengeful than Aunt Henrietta. She lost no time in impressing upon her astonished niece the fact that the offense must not be repeated. If a relative of hers were known to show the least friendliness toward kin of that Henrietta Dawson said relative could no longer remain in her home. And poor Janey Gray had not, because of late unfortunate circumstances, any other home to go to. She would have to grow stronger before she could resume her old position in the home-town library, and it would take money in the meantime to buy bread and butter to support even so small a body. So Janey could not consider the matter. She wrote, instead, a line of explanation to the disturbing John Harmon and pinned it to the apple tree. John, finding it there, went wrathfully to upbraid Aunt Henrietta for her part in the fray and was promptly and emphatically told that "no comings or goings with Caroline Carey's niece" would be tolerated.

"Janey, go up to the attic and fasten the skylight door; the wind will blow it wide. Then," added Aunt Caroline, in a conciliatory tone, "you had better lie down in your room and rest."

"All right," Janey answered, and climbed the stair to the floor above.

"It's queer," thought Janey Gray, a choking lump in her throat, "that love should find one at thirty, when one has been too busy caring for others to know much about happiness before, and then—to have to let that love go by."

Janey, leaning against the chimney, her waving hair framing her sweet, wistful face, was a very pretty thirty. Indeed, a man, coming slowly and unbelievably around from behind the chimney, seemed to appreciate the picture. Janey's eyes widened at sight of him.

"I came up," she hastily explained, "to close the roof door."

"So did I," the man told her.

"Aunt Caroline sent me," Janey added.

"The other old obdurate sent me," John Harmon said cheerfully.

Then the two laughed in very joy at each other's presence.

"I am supposed to be resting in my room," she said remorsefully. "I shall have to go down and confess to Aunt Caroline."

"That we are going to be married tomorrow," John directed.

He removed a long hair from his coat. And just then, above the farther trap door, appeared a gray head—and from a nearer hastily opened one, another.

"John Harmon!" exclaimed Aunt Henrietta.

"Janey Gray!" cried Miss Caroline.

"Did you ever!" said Henrietta, aside.

And the two old ladies smiled at each other.
