"WOMANLESS WEDDING" A GREAT SUCCESS

The "Womanless Wedding," given at the school house Friday evening for the benefit of the School Improvement Club was a huge success in every way. The receipts at the door were up to expectation and the entertaining features were superb.

The entertainment was scheduled to start at 7:30 but before seven o'clock all the seats were occupied. The musical program that was rendered before the wedding was as good as was ever heard in Marion. An orchestra composed of alumni of the Marion High School entertained the audience with several selections ranging from jazz to the most classical music. A brass quartet, composed of H. Moore, trombone; W. O. Moore, baritone; M. H. Cannan, cornet; and N. Moore, bass, rendered several selections which were greatly appreciated by the audience. Mrs. Newton Moore delightfully entertained the audience with a reading, and the quartet rendered several splendid vocal pieces.

Miss Miriam Pierce, who is a very talented musician and who has been on a Lyceum and Chautauque circuit for several months, played some selections on the violin.

Following the music came the great event of the evening, that is to say, the wedding. This event was one of great elegance and formality. The family and guests were all arrayed in their Sunday best and had with them their best set of manners. Little Miss Virgil Threlkeld (or Master) was the youngest guest, having not yet graduated from the bottle stage; with young Jean Mackey next, still in long dresses. They both played their parts well, due no doubt to their experience of some years before. Young Miss Ebb Sulinger was a shining light of the evening and caused more than one roar of laughter and applause from the audience.

There is some argument still prevailing as to whether Dr. T. A. Frazer, a bridesmaid or W. W. Runyan, one of the guests was the most beautiful girl present. Public sentiment seemed strong Friday evening in favor of Dr. Frazer.

Audrey Clark and J. B. Orme were the cutest little flower girls ever seen at any wedding.

The groom, C. W. Allen, seemed awed by the beauty and splendor of his bride and was hardly able to give answer to Rev. Sam Carnahan's vows of marriage. But it may have been the vow that awed him.

The bride "Miss" Presley Guess, was the most beautiful of the season and also the most charmingly dressed and probably the largest.

Both bride and groom are popular young people and along with their many friends and relatives, the Press wishes them a long and happy married life.

The School Improvement Club realized about $180. above expenses which will be expended toward improving and beautifying the school building.

FIRST BAPTIST CHURCH

Sunday School 9:30. All who do not attend elsewhere are invited. Senior and Junior B. Y. P. U. at 6 P. M.

The pastor, Dr. W. P. Meroney, will preach at 11 A. M. on "The Passing of Opportunity, or Making the Most out of Our Time." The evening sermon at 7:00 P. M. will be on "The Evidence of Conversion, or How May I Know that I am a Christian."

All always welcome.

FINDS BOND IN CAVE

Mr. Slaughter, living east of Marion, found a government bond in a cave near his place. Mr. Slaughter's cow was missing and he went on the hunt for her. On coming to the cave, he remembered that his son had some steel traps set in the cave, he entered the cave to examine the traps. He observed a bunch of leaves on a ledge near the entrance and he gave the bunch of leaves a closer examination. On stirring up the leaves a pocket book was found and on examination was found to contain a government bond of the value of $6,000 with a credit of $3000 this led Mr. Slaughter to give further search, and a second pocket-book containing $15 in silver, a gold watch and stick pin was found.

The name of the late J. D. Tetherington was on the bond. Mr. Slaughter returned to the house and notified Mrs. Tetherington of his find. It had not been known up to this time that the pocket book had been misplaced. No clue as to how they were misplaced is presented.

DEATH OF MRS. BIGHAM

Mrs. W. L. Bigham died at her home on North Main Street Thursday night, February 3. Funeral services were conducted at the Methodist church by Rev. G. P. Dillon Saturday afternoon. Interment followed at the New Cemetery.

Mrs. Bigham was a member of the Methodist church and always took an active part in the services. She is survived by her husband, Mr. W. L. Bigham, of this city, and eight children.

BUYING TOBACCO

Mr. J. B. Taylor of Madisonville, has located in Marion for the purpose of buying tobacco in this county. He has charge of the large barn known as the Elliot property. Mr. Taylor has been connected with Mr. Elliot for many years in the tobacco business.

He has associated with him Mr. B. L. Wilborn of this city.

MARRIAGE LICENSES

The following marriage licenses have been issued at the County Clerk's office this week:

Leny E. Asher and Miss Geneva Andrews; Onslow Nunn and Miss Ruth Holmes; E. F. Lawson and Miss Gertrude Walker.

HIGH SCHOOL NOTES

Miss Lois Atkins of Stroudsboro, Pennsylvania, arrived in Marion Saturday. Miss Atkins is the latest addition to the Marion High School faculty. She assumed her duties there Monday morning. Miss Atkins is a graduate of Iowa State University and before coming to Marion she taught at that place and had also been a short story critic in the city of New York. Her advent fills a long needed want in the ranks of the faculty of our local High School.

Last fall when school opened the enrollment in the High School was one hundred. Before the end of the first term the enrollment had increased to one hundred ten and now there are one hundred and twenty-six attending. There are at present about 365 enrolled in the grades, of which there are between thirty and thirty-five from the county schools. The Marion City Schools are exceedingly proud of this number of country boys and girls who have come to Marion for this opportunity.

New classes have been organized to accommodate the pupils who came in at the beginning of the second semester. Several of these new pupils are former rural teachers who are doing this to conform with the new state law that requires each rural teacher to have high school training.

Prof. R. E. Jagers has given up all his classes except psychology and will devote all his time in the future to supervision of the school.

A debate was held in chapel Tuesday morning on the question of Protective Tariff. Three students represented each side of the subject. The judges were Dr. J. R. Perry, T. H. Cochran and Jno. A. Moore.

The High School has recently been divided into four sections, each section being responsible for an entertainment once a month. These entertainments will be given every Friday afternoon.

MR. J. L. PACE ROBBED

Mr. J. L. Pace, while returning home from Salem in his buggy was attacked by two highway robbers and robbed of $16 after he had been knocked unconscious. The attack was made when Mr. Pace was passing the New Salem Church and after the robbers had taken the money they escaped. No clue as to the guilty men has been reported.

TO HOLD REVIVAL MEETING

Rev. G. P. Dillon has arranged to hold a revival meeting at the Methodist church in this city. Rev. Dillon, the pastor will do the preaching and Rev. W. B. Yates will have charge of the song service.

The meeting will begin Feb. 20. A cordial invitation is extended to all.

A DOUBLE SURPRISE BIRTHDAY DINNER

A double surprise birthday dinner was given in honor of Mr. P. R. Taylor and father in law, T. V. Simpson, of near Shady Grove on last Sunday. The former was 35 years of age and the latter 80.

The repast was held at the home of Mr. P. R. Taylor and the guests were:

Mrs. B. Leech, Mr. and Mrs. D. Cummings and son; Mr. T. V. Simpson; Mrs. Mary Eskew, Mr. and Mrs. Jno. Tally, Mr. and Mrs. Lee Philpot and children, Ola Golda and Roberta; Mr. and Mrs. William Wilson; Mr. and Mrs. S. O. Leet and son, Carlos; Mr. and Mrs. C. Melton and children, Agnes, Virginia and J. B.; Misses Flossie Seymour, Lillian Fox and Gwendolyn Waide. Messrs. Flody McConnell, Alton and Thomas Brown, Clyde Philpot Archie and Jesse Leet.

The day was a remarkable one for all. Neither of the honored were aware of the surprise in store for them until called in to a well filled table. Everyone present seemed to have an enjoyable time and departed wishing them many more such birthdays.

LIBRARY COMMISSION READY TO DISTRIBUTE NEW BOOKS

The Kentucky Library Commission has some new Traveling Libraries and is ready to send them to any group of people anywhere in the State who want to read. These may be had by writing to the Commission at Frankfort. The libraries are sent out in cases, fifty volumes in a case, and may be kept for six months. The only charge is $2.00 to cover shipping costs. Stories, books of travel, history, children's books, are some of the subjects covered. Some libraries are made up entirely for children's use in schools. Any teacher can get one. The State furnishes these books for the education and recreation of its citizens.

AIDS DISABLED SOLDIERS

Mr. H. A. Robinson of Hopkinsville has been in the city this week in interest of the disabled soldiers of the late war. He is sent out by the Federal Board of Vocational Training to enlist all disabled soldiers in training for whatever vocation they may choose, agriculture, fine arts, or business of any kind.

The Government furnishes tuition and pays a salary of $80 per month to single men. Married men receive $35 per month in addition. They receive this salary while in training.

Several from this county have already taken advantage of this opportunity and among them is Homer Hughes, who leaves next week to enter a conservatory of music to take violin. All who were disabled in the late war should seize this opportunity at once.

REVIVAL AT TOLU

Rev. O. M. Capshaw is conducting a great meeting at the Tolu Methodist church, assisted by Rev. J. J. Smith. Much interest is being manifested in the meeting and the attendance is good. Rev. Capshaw reported Tuesday that there had been forty professions.

Two big relief measures were put through the House Monday. Thirteen millions were appropriated for disabled soldiers and one hundred millions for roads.

The V. Y. M. Brotherhood of the Marion Methodist Sunday School had 127 men in the class last Sunday. The total Sunday School attendance was 359 on that day.

NEWS IN BRIEF

According to a report of the Actural Bureau of the National Board of Fire Underwriters, fires that might have been prevented have caused $10,000,000 damage in Kentucky during the last five years. The largest percentage of the loss was caused by defective flues. Fires caused by carelessness with matches and smoking came next.

Hickman Kentucky was badly shaken by an explosion early Friday morning. Several houses were jarred, what caused the explosion remained a mystery for several days until two coon hunters across the Mississippi river told of setting off nine sticks of dynamite to dislodge a couple of coons they had treed. They reported that even this failed and that they had to cut down the tree.

Discovery of a long sought fertilizer that will kill weeds and grow grass has been announced by the Experiment Station of Rhode Island State College as a result of twenty years of research work. It will cause the realization of a dream of gardeners the world over, a lawn without weeds. To do this merely substitute ammonium sulphate for nitrate of soda in the application of fertilizer. Slowly but surely the weeds will disappear, the scientists say.

The Elizabethtown News and the Elizabethtown Mirror of Elizabethtown, Ky., have consolidated and will be issued hereafter as the Elizabethtown News. It will be a semi-weekly and published by the News-Mirror Printing Co. Articles have been filed for corporation with a capital stock of $15,000. Mr. H. A. Sommers, present editor of the News is President of the new corporation.

Near Pittsburg, a prohibition officer found a tree with a spigot in it which was connected to a tube that supplied moonshine whisky.

The Tri-State Fair Association, which met at Evansville recently set the date for the Union County Fair from August 9 to August 13. The Association will make application to become a member of the American Trotters Association.

The Steamer, "Queen City," went down the Ohio recently loaded with passengers enroute to New Orleans and the Mardi Gras. This steamer is the first Cincinnati-New Orleans boat to make the trip in 15 years.

Efforts to run down night riders in Fleming county have failed. The grand jury reported Saturday that it was unable to discover the identity of any of the members of the band.

The famine situation in China has reached such a state that fifteen million people may starve unless immediate help is given, according to information received Saturday by the State Department in Washington.

It is said that Will H. Hayes of Indiana will be our next Post-Master General.

While the family was away burglars entered the home of Mrs. Ada Johnson, Morganfield, and stole two diamond rings and a necklace. Entrance was made through the front door, which had been left unlocked.

Miss Beth Hoffman is a candidate for Circuit Clerk of Hopkins county.

The highest sale of tobacco at Henderson was $43, Madisonville $22.50, the average at Providence was $14.56 last week.

The jury, trying Dr. H. C. Winnes for the murder of Miss Lura Parsons, Harlan, Ky., was unable to reach a decision, after eighty-nine hours of deliberation. The date for a new trial is set for April.

In his report Controller of Currency, Williams, recently made public a table showing the salaries of officials in the National Banks over the country. He stated that the largest salary paid any National Bank President was $100,000. Mr. Williams said that the country is now on a sounder basis, economically than it has been for several years.

A school house at Lawrenceville, Ill., was accidently blown up Monday and the teacher and seven pupils were killed. One of the school boys found a can of nitro-glycerine near the building and playfully tossed it to one of his fellows. The explosion followed. The nitro-glycerine was supposedly left by some well shooters.

Complete cessation of army recruiting was stopped Monday by order of Secretary of War Baker. No enlistments will be allowed except in case of those who have served one or more terms. Recruiting will be stopped until the army strength is reduced to 175,000.

WHERE CHILDREN ARE STARVING

In Austria-Hungary and Czechoslovakia, there are one million War orphans. Five thousand of these have been wandering like animals in the Rutenian Mountains.

In the Baltic Republics there are 150,000 orphans. Many thousand will be unable to attend school next winter for lack of shoes and other necessary clothing.

Poland has 500,000 orphans, the majority living in refuge camps instead of homes.

In Roumania there are 200,000 orphans.

Jugo-Slavia has 600,000 some living in devastated villages from which adults have fled.

In Soviet Russia there are three to four million orphans.

These figures vouched for by a Bulletin of the American Relief.

Through the European Relief Council, Herbert Hoover is asking Americans to give $33,000,000 with which to save the lives of 3,500,000 children. A contribution may be sent to any bank in Kentucky. Address, Richard Bean, Kentucky Treasurer, European Relief Council.

Front Elevation of proposed New Strand Theatre.

M. V. Arnold, Architect

The above is a cut of the front of the proposed new theatre and business block to be built on the site of the old Opera House.

The building is to be 70x160, two stories in front 30x70 and a ten foot hall leading to the theatre which is to be located on the ground floor in the rear. Offices will be located over the stores and entrances to same will be through the front hall.

The construction of this building will be unique in that each store will be built and owned by different parties but all will conform to the general plan shown above.

The theatre or auditorium will be built by a stock company composed of the people of Marion and Crittenden county and will be large enough to accommodate all kinds of conventions, public gatherings, etc. We need a building and auditorium of this kind in Marion so let us all boost and try our best to have this building erected, we will then have an edifice of which we can be proud.

LIGHTNING

By CORONA REMINGTON.

(Copyright, 1924, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

"I'll never get over it—I'll never get over it! What's the use of trying to cure me?"

Corinne Benton turned her young face to the wall and indulged in another delicious bout of weeping. Doctor Westover sat patiently at her bedside until the storm was over. Then he tried to reason with her.

"I'm older than you are, my child, and my experience has proved that most young people run onto the shoals in their first love affair, and ordinarily they get over it with surprising rapidity.

"As to trying to cure you, you have nothing the matter but a little attack of nerves, and a few months of good hard work will straighten them out; so tomorrow we're going to see about taking a business course. I've talked it all over with your parents and they approve most heartily."

Corinne tried to petrify the doctor with one horrible look, but if he was in the least affected he showed no signs and a minute later gave his patient a hearty handshake and left the room whistling. Indeed, so unimpressed did he appear that the girl began to fear that her features had failed to register the unspeakable disgust she had felt for anyone so hopelessly flippant and heartless. She must be developing facial paralysis, or something, she decided.

"All ready?" said the doctor to Corinne a few days later. "We're going down to start that business course this morning. I have a young protégé that graduates in medicine this June. He'll be needing an efficient girl around the office, so I'll engage you right now for him. Let's get busy."

"You're a perfect brute, and I just hate you!" Corinne found the energy to stamp her foot with emphasis.

"I guess I can bear up under that, too," said the doctor with unruffled good nature.

It was a hard fight, but Westover finally won, and as the days went by Corinne was disgusted to notice the return of color to her cheeks. At any rate she thought she would never get over the love tragedy, even if going out in the open did make her look healthy again—diseased bodies are curable, but never a crushed soul! As she improved, Doctor Westover saw less and less of his nervous, impetuous little patient.

"You're looking fine!" he would tell her heartily.

"But I'll never get over it," she would always reply. "I'll never love another man."

The doctor would smile to himself as he passed on, but Corinne knew nothing of this—old folks have a right to keep a few secrets to themselves.

With June came the zealous young Doctor Mann and the girl was duly installed. He was a big six-foot man who dressed well, spoke rapidly and had a lightning smile which he flashed with frequency and impartiality on all living things. He loved life, he loved people and he was possessed of a keen sympathy.

Naturally, the patients did not flock to his doors immediately, and both the young people had plenty of time on their hands. Corinne read a great deal and dabbled at fancywork, but the doctor had read himself almost into a frenzy for six long years and fancywork was not in his line, so things were decidedly slow for him.

"I say, Miss Benton," he exclaimed one morning, appearing from the inner office. "It's dull as blazes today. Couldn't we go into my consulting room and have a game of checkers?"

He looked almost sheepish and very boyish as he stood before Corinne.

"I guess so," she answered, rising. "But I'll never forget him," she declared loyally to herself as she glanced at the lightning smile.

They played checkers a great deal that summer, those two. To be sure, his practice grew steadily, but there were still many hours unutilized, and the young man's hands for checkers became more acute the more he played. It even reached the point where they would get so absorbed that they would fail to keep an ear open for patients in the outer room, and one day they kept Mrs. Conington Flasher waiting nearly an hour, as she testily informed them when they finally appeared.

"My dear madam," the doctor said suavely. "I'm sorry that you had to wait, but we were attending to an important matter."

That same evening—it was December then—Doctor Westover ran right into his little ex-patient as he started homeward. "Hello there!" he greeted. "Haven't seen you in a coon's age. How are you getting along with Mann?"

"Oh, all right; but I'll never forget him," she ended in her usual way.

"Forget whom?" asked the doctor.

"You know," replied the girl in injured tones.

"Oh, that other chap," said Westover, appearing to remember. "That's a fact—I'll have to give Mann a hint, because I believe he's beginning to cure for you, and it'd be a darn shame to let the poor fellow chase a rain-bow."

"No, no! Don't you ever dare!" exclaimed the girl tensely.

"Why not, I'd like to know?"

"Because—because it's none of his business," she ended weakly.

"Oh, all right," said Doctor Westover as he smiled to himself in the dark.

REV. JAMES RENFRO TO RE-ENTER THE MINISTRY

The Sebree Banner says: Rev. J. Renfro, former pastor of the Methodist church here, and who resigned as a member of the Louisville Conference last fall to accept a position as chautauqua director with the Rad-cliff Chautauqua System of Washington, D. C., has resigned that position and will reenter the ministry.

He has been assigned the pastorate of the Methodist Church South at Easley, S. C., and has begun his duties. Easley is a city of 4,450 people.—Providence Enterprise.

LETTER FROM ARIZONA

I am enclosing money order for $2.00 to pay my subscription on another year for your paper. We like to get it for we hear from friends that we would not hear from otherwise.

I see Marion has had another fire. I should think it would pay them to put in waterworks. Tempe has its reservoir on a butte not much higher than the hill east of Marion. The water is pumped from wells and we get a pressure sufficient to fight fires very successfully. It seems Marion could do the same.

Our county (Maricopa) is paving some of its roads. The county held an election on the 31st of December 1920 and voted $4,500,000 of road bonds. It had voted $4,000,000 previous to this which makes in all eight and a half million dollars for road purposes, which is estimated will pave about 300 miles of road. Crittenden county people must not think of comparing their county with Maricopa for it would make several of theirs in size and wealth too. It takes in all the Salt River Valley and a lot more. Arizona is a large state yet there are only fourteen counties. Tempe is having all its principal streets paved with cement. It will cost considerable money but we will be glad to have it done.

Money matters are very tight here now as is the case all over the country. The farmers went wild over cotton. They quit almost everything else. Now there is no market for cotton. A great many men have lost all they had. Some bought land at a high price, made a payment on it, and now they can't finish paying for it so will just lose it all.

Wishing you and the readers of your paper a happy and prosperous year as it is possible to have, I am Yours truly, A. F. WOOLF

STRAWBERRIES IN KENTUCKY

Mr. S. A. Powell, Manager of the Pembroke Association says: We started growing strawberries with only 100 acres pledged, so that we could make car load shipments. We have grown from the 100 acres to 646 acres this year to pick from. We consider the proposition a great deal better than growing tobacco for several reasons. We can not give our net income for it varies each year since our beginning, but the returns are always very gratifying. We have no inclination whatever to quit growing strawberries. We use acid phosphate nearly entirely for fertilizer. I believe that Christian county will soon be the largest strawberry growing center in the state. Located as we are, we believe that there is no berry that suits us as well as the Aroma.

S. A. POWELL, Mgr.

This is a letter I received from Mr. Powell. Why can't we make the humble beginning like the Pembroke folks did and set one half of your tobacco ground in strawberries this year? Four thousand to five thousand plants set an acre at $3. per thousand.

Why not make an effort to get away from the tobacco crop? I see a great future for Crittenden county farmers in growing strawberries. It will take the combined effort of some 50 farmers setting two acres each to begin with, I for one would set four or five acres if I could get enough interested to make the proposition a reality.

The General Trend of Prices is Downward

--but some articles of merchandise have not yet been affected.

Great reductions have been made in most of our line, we have accepted this decline with good grace and are offering our customers bargains that are in keeping with prices they are receiving for their live stock, tobacco, corn, oats, and other products.

When we have a decline in any article in our store our customers will receive full benefit of this decline. Isn't that fair enough?

We offer you Field Seeds of Quality at a price from 50 to 200% lower than last year. Red Top, Red Clover, Timothy, Orchard Grass and Blue Grass, Purity Test from 95 to 99%. Vulcan Best Chilled Plows and Repairs at 25% decline. Blount True Blue Steel Plows at the same discount. Red Spot Paint—the kind that lasts—at a big reduction in price. In fact nearly everything in our line has moved downward in price. Remember that we guarantee both Quality and Price of our merchandise.

BOARD EMPHASIZES DANGER OF RABIES

LOUISVILLE, KY., Feb. 9.—As a result of examinations of four dogs' heads sent the Laboratory of the State Board of Health during January, every one of which was found to be that of an animal that had been suffering with rabies when killed, the State Board of Health has issued a general warning against this disease.

The four heads which were sent in came from Elkton, Todd county; Paris, Bourbon county; Alexandria, Campbell county, and Sturgis, Union county. These animals had acted suspiciously and all had bitten human beings, who will avert the terrible consequences of being bitten by the promptness with which they acted in having the heads examined and in taking the Pasteur treatment.

The State Board of Health's warning emphasizes the fact that every person who has been bitten by a dog that has acted suspiciously should kill the animal immediately and send its head to the State Board of Health for examination. If the examination shows the dog had rabies the Pasteur treatment should be taken as quickly as the serum can be procured. If the treatment is begun in time rabies can be avoided readily enough, but if the treatment is too long delayed or entirely neglected the person may develop the disease, which has death as its certain culmination.

NOT NEEDED HERE

It has frequently been said that old dogs can not be taught new tricks, but a Chicago newspaper apparently thinks otherwise.

A reporter for the paper spends each day in traveling about the city, accosting all sorts of people, and testing their politeness. He finds means of coming in contact with the clerks in the stores, business men in their offices, public men on duty, judges, ministers housewives, and the public generally.

Sometimes he is dressed in fine
raiment and at others he is in rags, but always he is unknown.

To the person who makes the most courteous replies to his inquiries he presents a check entitling the person to fifty dollars. The check is paid by the paper and the polite one gets a write-up in its columns.

Its effect has become marked even in a city the size of Chicago.

Does any one here want to contribute fifty dollars to a campaign of honesty?

If so come across. This paper will furnish the publicity.

But then perhaps it is not needed here.

What think you?

LABOR RULES COST ROADS MILLIONS

Public Directly Interested in Carriers' Income.

BIG SUMS FOR WORK NOT DONE

Railways Asking Labor Board to Abrogate Wasteful Agreements
Made Under Federal Control.

"The entire country, its consumers, its farmers, its workmen, and even the railway employees themselves, are directly interested with the railroads in cutting down railway operating expenses."

This is the keynote of the case presented by the railroads to the United States Railroad Labor Board, now in session in Chicago.

The railroads have submitted evidence to the board to show why the National Agreements affecting railway shop labor should be abrogated, believing that this is a vitally important step in the process of reducing operating expenses.

This step is not only necessary to insure adequate earning power to the railroads, but will make possible an ultimate reduction in rates.

The agreements were made by the Railroad Administration just before the end of Federal control. The sum total of the rules and working conditions provided by the National Agreements have increased the operating expenses of the railroads by hundreds of millions, and have decreased the efficiency and output of the employees in other ways resulting in losses which cannot be calculated in dollars and cents.

For several weeks the railroads have been multiplying instances of the absurd and extravagant results of the labor rules fastened upon them by the National Agreements.

In one case cited before the board a machinist was paid 16 1/2 hours' wages for work all performed within eight hours. This case illustrated the effect of the rule that for each "call" the worker is to be paid five hours' wages even if he works only ten minutes.

The case of a car repairer on the Virginian Railway, who was recently paid over $1,000 for services which were never rendered, and in addition the same amount of overtime as was made by his gang, was another example.

In connection with the rule that none but mechanics or apprentices shall do mechanics' work, the following was cited to indicate its unfairness:

Five Hours' Pay for 30 Minutes' Work

"The El Paso & Southwestern Railroad recently had an engine set out at Douglass, and about the time it was ready to go to its train it developed that a window light was broken in the cab. It was necessary for the foreman to call a carpenter to do the work that he could have performed himself in a few minutes. The train was delayed one hour and 30 minutes, and the employee called to do the work was paid five hours for work requiring 30 minutes."

The inefficiency created in inflexible application of the rules contained in the agreements in question was illustrated in the following actual case which recently occurred on the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad:

"An engine was placed in the shops for certain repairs. Because of the provisions of the National Agreement, it was necessary that members of five crafts perform parts of this work; formerly, the entire operation was performed by the members of but two crafts."

$6,500,000 for Work Not Performed

How the railroads of the country were compelled to pay almost $6,500,- 000 in the first six months of 1920 for service not rendered because of the effects of but one of the 182 rules included in the Shop Crafts National Agreement was shown in the testimony.

This punitive payment for work never performed was required by a clause in the National Agreement, which provides that when employees are required to check in and out on their own time they will be paid one hour extra at the close of each week.

The rigid classifications of labor, when taken in connection with the rule that requires that a man must have four years' experience before being employed to perform any of the work listed in them, result in paying rates applicable to men who are supposed to be fully qualified for work which does not require men of four years' experience.

To illustrate how the inflexibility of many of the rules now enforced operate to mulct the railroads of large sums for services which in the absence of these rules could be obtained for relatively moderate sums, evidence was laid before the Labor Board showing that three men who were employed at a small pumping station in Michigan, performing unskilled work, would, when classified under the rules, receive an excess of pay amounting to more than the value of all the water pumped and current generated at this station.

The Chicago testimony contains literally hundreds of instances such as these, all supporting the contention of the railroads that the labor rules under which they have been forced to work are such as to prevent the "honest, efficient and economical management" demanded by the Transportation Act.

JESSICA

By H. LOUIS RAYBOLD.

So this was the answer! Jessica folded the bit of paper, her lip curled scornfully. Well, any one who mixed up her letters in such a careless fashion certainly needed a secretary. Here she had been waiting and waiting for a reply to the long letter she had sent her aunt, and now had come this brief note addressed to the head of some vocational bureau asking said head to "Please secure me, as soon as possible, an efficient secretary, not too prepossessing in appearance."

Jessica had spent her life in a tiny western town with her invalid father. Released by his death from years of tedious if affectionate devotion, she had followed his last wishes and written to his sister in New York, from whom he had not heard in many years. A note requesting a secretary! Efficient—but not prepossessing. That was an odd requirement, mused Jessica. Aunt Louisa had no sons.

Startled at the idea which occurred to her, she jumped up, ran to the dresser and leaned toward the mirror, undoing with rapid fingers her gold-tinted, softly curling hair.

Two weeks later Aunt Louisa, a vigorously intellectual woman, sat in her library interviewing a simply gowned, sober-eyed young woman who had presented herself as applicant for the secretaryship.

"The only trouble," said the aunt, "is that when you smile—well, you show possibilities. To be quite frank, my dear young lady, I am through with attractive secretaries. With me lives my ward, the son of an old friend, and although an estimable young man, I may say that he has an eye for beauty. My last secretary was one of those slightly, blue-eyed—er—baby dolls, as they say, and—but you understand what I am getting at."

Never before had Jessica been so happy as she was in the days that followed.

Then home came Slade Tremont. And if Aunt Louisa had seen possibilities in Jessica, no less did Slade.

"I say, Miss Boardman, why don't you wear your hair more—more fluffy or something?" he asked the second morning of his arrival.

"Please do not be personal, Mr. Tremont," said Jessica, coldly. For the first time in his young life Slade was hard hit.

The afternoon that Slade announced his intention of running on to Boston for a day or two, her aunt also decided to visit a friend who had a model farm in the country. Jessica, left in charge of the house, yielded to a sudden whim to forget for a moment that she was the very plain Deborah Boardman.

Going to her room, she took out her one frilly, feminine gown, and laid it on the bed. Then, her eyes sparkling, she did up her hair, not as she had worn it in the old days, but in the latest, most daring coiffure she had observed in the fashionable city.

Ah, this animated woman with the smiling lips, the soft throat rising from the lace fichu—this was not the unprepossessing Deborah—nor yet the old Jessica! This was a quite new person, touched with the magic wand of love!

Jessica ran lightly down the stairs and out into the garden. She drank in the permeating fragrance, lifted her head, and looked straight into the eyes of Slade Tremont!

"I—I beg your pardon—why Miss Boardman—you?" The look of surprise on Slade's face became one of puzzled, but happy bewilderment. "You wonderful, wonderful girl. I got as far as the station and came back to tell you I loved you. And I adore you!" Jessica's eyes filled with happy love—then fell.

"My darling," said Slade. "My darling Deborah."

"Otherwise Jessica," interrupted a voice dryly.

"You!" cried Slade.

"Just me," said Aunt Louisa. "I came home for something I had forgotten. I found more than I expected—wait!" She lifted a hand to ward off Jessica's rushing explanations.

"But not more than I hoped. My ward has given me several uneasy moments—yes, you have, Slade—and when you, Jessica, wrote to me, it occurred to me that you might be just the wife for my ward. But how to tell if you were?"

So I tried that little ruse of apparently mixed letters. Thought I to myself, if the girl is worth anything and clever, she'll see the chance and take advantage of it, and I will get a light on her real self. Didn't you ever wonder why you didn't hear again, or why the position wasn't filled before you came?"

"Yes," murmured Jessica, "of course, but—"

"Exactly," continued her aunt. "Alas, I wanted Slade to see you under the least favorable circumstances. If, then, he fell in love, I would be sure it wasn't just with a pretty face, although yours is pretty enough," she concluded graciously.

"I can't thank you enough," began Jessica, but her aunt, perhaps not unaware of her treacherous ward's hinting glance and gestures toward the house, moved slowly away.

"Jessica!" cried Slade, holding out both arms. "Now what do you say when I say 'Will you marry me?'"

What Jessica said, as she went to his arms, was not loud enough for even the nodding Richmond rose to hear, although it reached straight to Slade's happy heart.

Waking Up

By ALDEN CHAPMAN

(Copyright, 1920, Western Newspaper Union.)

Greg Morton had been for two years a clerk in the store of Seth Gray. He had saved several hundred dollars and both his employer and his daughter Ruth, who helped in the store, liked him and admired his thrifty ways. Ruth had been almost unconsciously an important element in forming the character of the young man, but store, Ruth, thrift and humble contentment went all to the winds one day, when a letter arrived informing Morton that he had fallen heir to a small fortune.

He resigned his position in the store by telephone, half wild with the immediate possession of several thousand dollars representing accumulations on investments, the principal of which was to become his further on. Then a few days later he appeared at the store, resplendent as to attire and jewelry adornment.

"I've been so busy getting used to being rich," he declared, "that I couldn't get around before. Mr. Gray, if you need any money, I've got a thousand or two you can have to expand your business."

"You're a good-hearted fellow, Greg," spoke the storekeeper, "but slow and sure is my motto, and I never borrow. Ruth is upstairs in the living rooms."

"I think I'll speak a word or two to her, if you don't object."

"I won't, and neither will Ruth. We miss you too much for that."

Morton sought out Ruth. As his eyes fell upon her neatly garbed form and expressive face, a vague sense of abandoning good old friends assailed him, but the emotion was only temporary. Glare and glitter had already fascinated him, and he was eager to get back to comrades who were indulgently helping him to spend his newly acquired wealth. She greeted him in a friendly, familiar way, as was her custom with him, but there was a certain shyness, he quickly noticed, which he attributed to a realization on her part of changed.

"I went shopping yesterday, Ruth," he said brightly, "to get my cousin a sunburst pin, and I've bought you one, too," and he extended a little velvet case exposing a pretty bauble with half a dozen diamonds in it.

"I can't accept such an expensive present from you, Greg," spoke Ruth in a subdued tone, "but give me that rosebud in your buttonhole."

If Greg followed an impulse, he would have gathered her into his arms and told her what he thought of her. Already, however, the wiles of a new social influence had enveloped him. The idle and pleasure seeking had claimed him as their own, particularly for his money. There was a group of newly made comrades who hung about him daily. There was a Miss Vera Burgoyne to whom he had been introduced, his senior by a few years, but artificially concealing the fact. She had set her cap to capture a young man hardly her equal socially, but with promising prospects. At heart a coquette, she had dazzled Morton quite, and his male friends had made him believe that a match with Miss Burgoyne would put him up in the world materially. They feasted on his generous bounty and flattered and enjoyed him. He was in for jollity, and when one day he appeared on the street with a hat controlled by a tiny wire, and shot it up from his head in greeting acquaintances, his chums noted him "so original." When again Morton drew a mock revolver from his pocket, snapped it and landed a cigar between his teeth, it was designated "the classiest bit of the season." He was courted like a king, but one day—

Morton never forgot it. He had discovered that he had used up his entire cash, even overdrawing at bank. On top of this came word that the concern in which his capital was invested had failed and his entire principal was swept away.

Late nights, excitement, his loss brought on a natural reaction.

Deserted by his friends, in debt and harassed with new troubles, he fell ill and lay in fever and delirium for over a week.

"Queer," was his first word, faintly spoken, as he opened his eyes to normal coherency.

"Ah, better! That's good," spoke the bluff, hearty tones of Seth Gray. "We thought you would be better cared for here than at the hotel. One good thing, we haven't been pestered with those new friends of yours. Miss Burgoyne sent a servant to inquire after you, once, only."

"That's more than I expected," said Morton, "for she dropped me in a flash when she heard of my loss. Not that I am sorry. False, selfish humanity. And you took me in. Well, I'll be able to get about in a day or two and relieve you of my charge. I suppose you feel a bit hard at me leaving you the way I did—"

"Oh, yes," observed Mr. Gray satirically, "so much so that Ruth and I quarreled over which should sit up nights and care for you. So much so that I am going to offer to take you into partnership, if you're over your evil dream, and have waked up to the practical issues of life."

Greg Morton buried his head in the pillow to hide his tears. Big-souled Seth Gray—how he blessed him. Artless, loving Ruth—how he realized her true worth at last, and when he told her so, knew that he had won a treasure among woman-kind.

THE REVERSE SIDE

By JACK LAWTON.

(Copyright, 1920, Western Newspaper Union.)

Stephen sat with brooding eyes looking over his meadows. To Stephen, the spreading farmland which he inherited was the most beautiful thing in the world. In it he found his life-work and his joy. To watch the growing and plente of the labor of his hands and brain, was to him a great wonder and satisfaction. And it was his misfortune that love, coming later than it came to men who sought out their entertainment, should come in the delightful but unsuitable person of Hildegard Vane. Hildegard was born and raised to an environment very different from Stephen's meadows. Hildegard had known luxury and nothing but luxury and its benefits. That he should have found her at all was inconceivable. A relative Vane had purchased as a toy a certain farm in Stephen's vicinity, and under the Vane's Midas touch the farm turned out as profitably as his various other investments. So to the big remodeled country house on the hill, he invited occasionally city friends for week-end visits, and his favorite niece Hildegard was one of the most frequent visitors. At length, after a winter season of gaiety, it was thought best by the family physician that Miss Hildegard go to her uncle's rural estate for a prolonged and restful stay; and so, riding upon her pony one day, Hildegard had found Stephen's farmland, and entering down the tree-lined avenue, asked for a drink of cool water. When at last the girl had taken Stephen for one of the usual helpers. When he responded to her request in his deferential courteous way, she became interested in his personality, and questioned the elder Vane, upon her return, concerning, "the big good looking farmer."

Her uncle laughed as he made reply. "Look out for your heart, Hilda. A man like Stephen Strong might do more damage to a girl's heart, rough clad, than any drawing-room idol."

Hilda smiled retrospectively. "He looks like his name," she said, "strong. Tell me about him."

"Registering interest already," her uncle remarked. "Well, all I can tell is from reports. He's a college man, agriculture; capable, successful, honest. Wedded to country life."

"He would be," she mused, "or he would not devote himself to it."

The proper introduction had come about quite naturally. As Hilda was driving one evening with the elder Vane, Stephen approaching, stopped to give greeting. After that the girl met him frequently, and later accepted various gravely offered invitations to inspect the Strong farm, or to drive through the hills at Stephen's side. Stephen had not realized that in this proximity a hopeless love might come to him; friendship, pure and helpful, he had thought of as a possible and pleasant result. But love came. And such a love as only a true and simple heart like Stephen's could know.

Now that she was going back to the city, and autumn lay upon the farm lands, Stephen told himself cruelly that he might have won her love if he had stooped to that selfishness. There was no vanity in the thought, only sorrow and a knowledge of the sweetness of her nature. But he was allowing her to go without a word, without a sign. Her lovely eyes had been wistful at parting with an appeal she herself but half recognized. Stephen stubbornly ignored their appeal. This was the only life for which he was fitted, the only life in which he might earn a measure of success, but to the Hildegard Vane to isolation, to take her from the court where she charmed and fitted—well, he was unwilling to accept the great gift of her remuneration. The uncle had hinted of a millionaire back there, who waited her favor. Hildegard should not be tempted in an hour of sympathetic feeling for himself, from her millions. So, politely, coldly, Stephen bade goodbye. One comfort he gave himself, the sending of a basket of selected fruits to her at her uncle's, a farewell gift before her coming departure.

And now as he sat, he held her formal "thank you" note in his big brown hands. A square white card, gilt edged and of brief wording. Stephen held the card gently, and turned it slowly about, his very touch, a caress. Suddenly he noticed that he had neglected to read the reverse side of the card. There was writing here. Hilda woman-like, had added a postscript. Then his eyes racing on to the words, he realized that this was no postscript which she had written, but a complete note to her sister Elizabeth, evidently in the city. Often the girl had spoken to him regarding her married sister Bess, her mother, and their aspirations. Hilda laughed lightly, he remembered, as she bewailed her difference to the women of her family.

"Dearest Bess," read Stephen, "I am coming back to you, don't worry. The eclipse which you fear for me is not to happen. But honestly Bess, I'd rather live here forever and ever with my man of the soil, than do anything else in the world. He is true Bess, and Strong—that's his name."

A blot ended the message. "Then anything else in the world," he murmured joyously. "Oh! little girl of mine, you are going to have your choice."

STUFF O' DREAMS
By CRAWFORD LUTTRELL.

(C. 1924, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

She unfolded the scrap of yellowed paper, punctured with pin holes, and read again, after a lapse of eighteen years, the words that had accompanied a fraternity emblem sent her in the faraway days of youth. "As this 'Star and Crescent' binds thousands of hearts together in the United States, so may it bind our eternal friendship."—M. M. He had underlined the words "hearts" and "our."

She had gone back home on a visit and, following the proverbial rule of rummaging the attic on a rainy day in search of entertainment, had found by chance a packet of old letters that she thought had been burned before she married and went away. The little fraternity pin that had graced her schoolgirl blouses had been fastened through that scrap of paper.

At the thought, memory turned the tide of time backward and she saw herself, a long-legged, big-eyed girl standing timidly at a window in the post office, asking for a package.

Clare looked through the little dormer window at the gentle, soaking summer rain. Mechanically she opened one of the old letters, still bravely flaunting the crimson and black of his college colors. He had written with the ardent assistance of twenty-one that he could never love anybody else and that her influence would mold his life. She could make of him what she willed. Age had its compensation, she reflected. She could never blindly trust again, never be hurt with the sharp blade of disillusionment whose keen edge only time could wholly dull. She looked at life through the fading eyes of thirty-five. They were too worldly wise to glimpse visions of such stuff as dreams are made of!

It was when she was passing through the hall below on her way to her room to freshen up a bit before dinner that she heard a deep, musical voice inquiring for her at the front door. Thinking that it was an old-time neighbor, she went quickly downstairs.

She recognized him immediately, although the slimmness of youth had given place to the rotundity of middle age. His black hair was thinning. Only his eyes and his voice were the same.

"How very much like a fairy story this is," she laughed when they were seated in the candle-lighted old parlor. "I have been in the attic all the afternoon. I found some of your old letters there and a little yellowed slip of paper which still bears the pin holes of the fraternity emblem you sent me long ago."

"I still have that pin," he said and looked at her without smiling. "It is locked in a little black box in my desk."

She laughed, although her lips were not quite steady in her mirth. "It has been so long since those far days when we flirted and pretended to know all about love. Oh, well, I rode for a hand fall and the tumble was sufficiently painful to guard against another one."

"You aren't bitter?" He leaned forward, his disconcerting brown eyes never wavering from her face. "You wouldn't be you, if you were!"

"You don't believe, surely, that this aging shell covers the girl you used to know, Milton?" She died, ever so long ago.

"She couldn't die," he corrected her, and his eyes smiled as they had smiled, warning and waking her heart years before. "Tell me about yourself, everything," he urged.

She twisted the narrow gold band on her finger. "There is really nothing to tell. I've had quite an average life."

"You married—let me see—how long ago?" he questioned.

"Fifteen years."

She was wholly unprepared for what followed. "Clare, I am sure that you and your husband, too, will understand what I am about to say to you. It would be foolish not to refer to my love for you—it has played too important a part upon my life. Your abiding faith made me what I am, and today I stopped off here, in your little home town, to try to get your present address in order to write to you and gratefully acknowledge all that I have been privileged to tell you."

"Your wife—"

"I told her, before she died, just what I am telling you."

"I hadn't heard, Milton. I'm sorry—you must know—"

She wondered what to say to him, and, finding no words, sat silent, clasped tense hands in her lap. He rose to go. "Surely your husband will not mind my pilgrimage here to tell you this, to thank you for the beautiful part you have played in the great scheme of things for me. The human equation—no man escapes it or wants to escape it," he amended. "I believe my train goes in a short time. I will have to say good-by now, although I say it reluctantly."

"He would have been glad," she whispered, sudden tears coursing down her flushing cheeks. "If he could know."

"Then he—"

"I have been a widow, Milton, for many, many years."

"Would you mind," he asked gently, taking her hands in his, "if I stayed over and waited for another train?" She looked up at him and something deep in his brown eyes that the years had failed to change, made her know that even at thirty-five one can believe in the gossamer fabric of such stuff as dreams are made of.
