MARION TO BE IN DARKNESS

At this time it looks like we are to be without city lights for six months or longer. Mr. Jenkins' contract to furnish city lights expires the first day of May and he has been ordered by the City Council to remove at once his plant. That means that for some time to come we are to be in darkness. This means no little to this city. It will affect the religious life, the social life and the business life. Any person is more apt to do a wrong thing under the cover of darkness than in the light.

This means an extra expense and an inconvenience to about 300 families of Marion to say nothing of the expense and inconveniences to every business interest of the city as well as the churches, saying nothing of the imperiling of business.

It looks to some of us that arrangements could be made and should be made to continue the lights right on up to the time the new plant is ready to operate, and some of us are persuaded to believe that if some arrangements are not made to continue the lights it will be on account of pure Cussedness.

The people pay their taxes to have the streets lighted and they may be assured their taxes will not be reduced and yet get no lights. The welfare of the people deserve some consideration. The public believes that the City Council, Mr. S. M. Jenkins and Judge R. L. Moore could and ought to get together and continue the lights. The lack of co-operation will blight any town.

Owing to conflicting rumors as to the light situation it was wise in Mr. Cochran to call a mass meeting of the citizens on Friday night at School Auditorium in order that a complete understanding might be reached. It would be a wise step for the City Council, Mr. Jenkins and Judge R. L. Moore to be present in the meeting in order that amical agreement may be reached.

Let's get together and pull together.

NOVELTY NIGHT AT SCHOOL AUDITORIUM

The second of a series of entertainments for the benefit of the Improvement Club fund was given on Monday night at the school auditorium by home talent.

A good sized house greeted the performers and a splendid program was carried out. The characters were well chosen and performed their parts to the delight of every one.

After the opening chorus a song sketch given in costume entitled "April Showers", a one-act play entitled "A Pair of Lunatics" dealing with a case of mistaken identity, was given. The characters were Miss Lena Holtzclaw and Mr. H. C. Franklin.

Mr. Franklin entertained the audience with two readings and two musical sketches were given.

The entertainment closed with a dramatic sketch of the French Revolution entitled "Vengeance is Mine." The characters were Hollis C. Franklin as the Priest and John Young Brown as the soldier. This sketch was very dramatically rendered and the performers were much applauded by the audience.

Mrs. Lucile Pope Wiggins was director of the musical part of the program which was a "very pleasing feature of the entertainment."

SUMMER SCHOOL

FOR TEACHERS

The Teachers' Institute as they have been conducted in the past have been discontinued and in their place there has been provision made whereby each county may conduct a Teacher Training Summer School. This will offer advantages not heretofore provided for teachers as it will enable them to secure professional training without the necessity of leaving home.

These schools are under the supervision of the State Department of Education and there are standard rules which must be complied with before a county can secure a Summer School. These conditions however are very easy to meet.

There must be an enrollment of not less than 30 pupils.

The term must be not less than six weeks of five days each and six hours of actual work each day.

Not less than two instructors shall be employed with approved qualifications.

Regulations in regard to the course of study, text books used and the number of pupils in each class will be complied with.

Tuition is to be free. All teachers teaching in the elementary schools and those qualifying to teach who are 16 years of age or over may attend free of cost.

After July 1st an applicant for teachers' certificate must have had one year high school and five weeks normal training before entering an examination. Any high school or professional work done in the Summer School will to the extent of credits secured help teachers in complying with this law.

I am ready to arrange for a school in Crittenden county provided enough teachers are interested to justify the cost. Attendance is not compulsory as it was in institutes but I am anxious to bring the opportunity to all the teachers who desire to attend.

If a school is conducted at Marion it will begin on June 5th and continue six weeks.

In order that I may know whether to arrange for this school I am asking all who are interested in attending to see or write me at once giving your name as a student. J. L. F. PARIS, Supt.

THE WORK OF THE CLINIC

The Clinic established in Marion by the Crittenden County Health officer, Dr. T. Atchison Fraser has just closed after a period of successful work. The work was in charge of the State Board of Health under the leadership of Dr. Charles B. Kobart of Lebanon. He has been assisted by Miss Barbara Cochran of Mayfield and Mrs. Matty Snedaker of LaGrange. Both nurses are graduates of nursing and have had post graduate work in public health.

More than 800 people have been examined for trachoma, tonsils and adenoids. Seventy-nine people have been operated upon for trachoma while 30 have been treated; 26 persons have had both tonsils and adenoids removed while eight have had their adenoids removed.

People from different parts of the county have had the services of these splendid health people and Marion and Crittenden county feel proud of the fact that the school and community have been able to meet the menace of trachoma.

No child in Marion Schools has trachoma.

GRAND OLD CIRCUS DAY

Fresh from winter quarters bright and glittering with gold leaf and varnished paint and teeming with hundreds of new and novel features is the Campbell-Bailey Hutchinson Combined Circus and Wild West, perhaps not the largest but one of the best in the whole world.

Neither money nor trouble has been spared to make the performance the best ever presented under a circus canvas. The regular circus program is opened with a beautiful patriotic ensemble, which serves to introduce the entire personnel from the big dressing rooms.

Then, with blood-stirring music from the large concert band, the acts follow each other in bewildering rapidity. Prominent among the displays are the Crillon troupe in a series of new and daring feats in the air and on the ground, The Day-enport Family of Riders, the Azuki Japs, Campbell-Bailey-Hutchinson Herd of performing Elephants, Rochetta, the man who walks on his head and a score of other acts. The clowns number 25 and include some of the funniest jesters known. Almost three hours of solid enjoyment is given those who attend, and this is augmented by a thrilling Wild West exhibition entitled "The Passing of the West." The Campbell-Bailey-Hutchinson circus will give two complete performances at Marion, Thursday, May 11.

There will be the usual free street parade at noonday. Performances start at 2 and 8 P. M. Doors open one hour earlier.

IN HER HUSBAND'S MEMORY

Mrs. Maude Donohue, Minnesota Newspaper Woman, to Erect Building as Memorial.

The day Mrs. Maude A. Donohue's husband enlisted she went to work on the editorial staff of the San Francisco Examiner. She is now editor and publisher of a progressive little weekly paper at Okato, Minn., trying by keeping herself always occupied, to forget the day when she received the news that her husband had been killed in action in France.

Mrs. Donohue intends this year to erect a new newspaper building in Okato as a memorial to "My Bill," and then she intends as a "distant dream" to write a book of his life. Last year she visited her husband's grave at Romagne, where 22,000 were buried in the heart of the Argonne wood.

Probably no paper in the country gives more sympathetic treatment to the problem of the returned soldier than does the weekly at Okato. "The tragedy of war has broadened my viewpoint," says Mrs. Donohue. "There is much to be done, and I'm frank to say that I expect great things of the American Legion as an organization representing men who know what the word 'service' means."

FRENCH AWARD IS DECLINED

Legion's National Commander Accepts Honor Only in Name of Those Who Served.

Hanford MacNider is one of the negligible number of persons who declined the award of "commander of the Legion of Honor," proffered by the French government. Mr. MacNider, as national commander of the American Legion, adroitly shifted the honor to the heads of a million soldiers. He said that he could receive the decoration only as a tribute to all Legionnaires—and when the medal arrives it will be deposited in the archives of the Legion.

When he received the notification of the award, he cabled Marshal Foch: "In the name of 5,000,000 service men and women represented by the American Legion, we extend through you to the President of the French Republic our gratitude over the tribute proffered. Realizing that this is not awarded to me personally we accept it for every man and woman of our organization and in extending our deep thanks pledge to France our continued love and devotion."

Mr. MacNider was made a chevalier of the Legion of Honor on the battlefield in 1918.

AERIAL POLO IS NEW SPORT

Aerial polo is the latest sport. One of the chief features of an entertainment given by the American Legion at Miami, Fla., was a game of polo staged high in the air, sans mallets, sans ponies, sans ball, sans everything except a dozen nimble aviators and several dozen toy balloons.

Every sort of twist from the Immelman turn to the maple-leaf drop is called into play during the contest. Here is what happens: A motorboat loaded with the many-colored balloons of the proverbial country fair plows out into the harbor and drops anchor. From nearby hangars come galloping a dozen Pegassuses. They take the air, and when they are equidistant from the launch, at a safe altitude, the little balloons are released and go soaring upward in great confusion on the air.

The str rider who captures the greatest number is declared the winner. The Legion pilots who tried it said that it used to be easier catching Taubes.

Would Postpone This Expense.

The dome of the proposed Victory Memorial building in Washington would be virtually a huge service flag. It would be studded with five million stars—gold for those who died, blue for those who served. The plan is to have each star engraved with the initials of the soldier it stands for, so that future visitors will be able to distinguish them, with the aid of a telescope, from the floor below. The American Legion has taken the stand that the erection of the expensive memorial should be withheld until there are fewer suffering veterans on the streets.

ARENA BATTLES FOR LEGION

Famous Castilian Matador, Ex-German Fighter, Stages Bloodless Conflicts With Angry Bulls.

To show that bull-fighting is really as simple, and as bloodless, and as refreshing as a quiet game of golf, Senor Charlot Molino, famous Castilian matador, has been staging arena battles all over the country for the benefit of the American Legion. Molino is an ex-German fighter, besides being a bull-fighter.

When he goes into the ring with his fire-breathing animal, he carries a small red cloth to make the animal froth. He carries no sword and trusts entirely to his adroit footwork to save him from embarrassment at the horns of the bull. He wears a genuine costume of red velvet trimmed with gold, valued at $2,000.

SKETCHES WON THE RECRUITS

Alvan Hadley, Crayon Artist, Now "Drawing" Some of the Prominent Legion Men.

Alvan C. ("Hap") Hadley, crayon expert and ex-marine, travels with a Greenwich Village troupe. He probably recruited more marines by his clever sketches, during the war, than any other individual. No one that ever looked very hard at one of his pictures ever stayed out of the marines, and no one that ever looks very hard now ever stays away from his show. He is at present busy sketching prominent members of the American Legion, outside of "hours," for publication in newspapers.

When "Hap" outlined in the marine corps at Paris Island, a red-necked sergeant asked him what his occupation was.

"Artist," said Hap. So the sergeant put him to work white-washing garbage cans. The crowning disappointment of Hap's life is that he never ran across that sergeant again.

JOB FOR EX-SERVICE MEN

Civic Organizations Co-Operating With American Legion to Find Work for Ex-Soldiers.

Civic organizations are co-operating with the American Legion in every city, town and hamlet throughout the country to put across the nationwide drive for employment for the 700,000 ex-service men now out of a job.

The Legion is aiming to get men into jobs by stirring up the industrial life in communities. Distribution of employment by changing men on daily shifts; pushing of engineering projects, bridge repair and county highway improvement; speeding up of municipal and public utility enterprises—woodyards, recreation centers, dredging, installation of telephones, paving; reforestation and reclamation projects; truck gardening, with the establishment of community gardens worked by ex-soldier labor; stimulating building of all kinds; encouragement of the "back-to-the-farm movement"—these and many more methods are being used to give the distressed jobless man a chance once more to do a day's work.

Carrying On With the American Legion

With mingled feelings, Legion men read that the old yellow, grinning Paris taxi-cabs—the vehicles that took Gallieni's army off to fight on the Marne, are to be replaced.

A United States marine sold the United States superdreadnaught New Mexico to a retired farmer at Long Beach, Cal., for $300 cash. Navy officials, however, refused to deliver the ship.

An Oklahoma sheriff allowed three "killings" to take place without much opposition. Ewing C. London, commander of the Ardmore post of the American Legion, was appointed his successor.

Varying conditions existing in the different parts of the country will largely determine what proportion of service men will desire cash payment, the Legion has learned from its referendum votes.

Blind beggars sometimes have good eyesight, the American Legion has found. One "ex-soldier" with medals bought from a book shop was caught taking $30 an hour from New York's theater crowds.

Danger Next Door

By R. RAY BAKER

© 1921, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.

Something startled John Ransom out of his dream.

Actually he had not been sleeping. It was only a dose, with his mind immersed in retrospection, and the reverie concerned the woman who had meant everything seven years ago—Wilbur's mother. There had been a vestige of a smile about John's face during the pondering, but now he frowned reproachfully and berated himself in severe terms. It must not happen again, because it was a sacrilege against his creed. For John Ransom was a misogynist, made so by those seven years of brooding.

He checked a yawn and wondered what had brought him from the grasp of semi-sleep. Enlightenment came in the form of a "Hello!" It was followed by the lusty lungs of his robust son, who had been conducting a circus with stuffed animals and wooden clowns in the room set aside for his play.

The father stole quietly into the playroom, where animals and clowns sprawled in ungainly attitudes on the floor, with legs and arms extended stiffly in a variety of directions. This did not seem inappropriate for the clowns, but for dignified creatures like giraffes it must have been most humiliating. Wilbur stood at the window, making energetic gestures with his arms, apparently trying to signal some one.

In the window opposite, in the house next door, was framed a vision in pink, a dainty little girl with face wreathed in golden hair beribboned to match her garb. She was smiling winsomely and invitingly, her head to one side, as she tried to interpret Wilbur's weird pantomime.

"Come away from that window!" John called peremptorily, when he realized the danger confronting his son—that a vampire had begun operations while the father slept at post, as it were.

He led Wilbur from the point of peril and into the library, where he sat and looked his son over with frank disapproval. The youngster was too attractive, but that could not be remedied. It was not strange that a vampire had started to work! Well, there were things that could be remedied. The blouse was an unnecessary evil, and a real boy's shoes should not be so nicely laced, and his hands and face were too well scrubbed. Confound that Isabelle! The old woman was expected to look after the boy, as well as the house, but not to make a coxcomb out of him.

"You stay away from the house next door!" John ordered. "Don't you ever let me catch you over there. Play with the boys. About time you had a new baseball bat and glove, isn't it? I'll get them tomorrow."

The idea of keeping Wilbur from the company of girls was no mere whim; it was an obsession, based on the unfortunate experience with Wilbur's mother seven years ago, when certain legal papers had been signed and she had gone West, where later she had died.

Now, Wilbur was accustomed to obey orders, and he faithfully shunned the house next door. But his father had said nothing about keeping folks away from the Ransom premises, and John came home from the office one afternoon to discover his son playing with the pink-clad girl within the confines of his own fence. He lost no time in dragging Wilbur into the house, having summarily dismissed the new-found playmate, who made faces with the aid of her tongue and nasal organ.

"Who is she?" demanded the father. "I'll have to see her mother about it." "Her name's Jefferson," Wilbur admitted, squirming uneasily. "She just moved in the other day. Her mother's a dressmaker, and she hasn't any father. He got drowned or something."

A few days later Wilbur came from school in company with the girl next door—and he was lugging her books! "I couldn't help it, pa," Wilbur pleaded. "She just tagged after me and handed her books to me. Besides, I kinda like her. What's a fellow to do?"

"Don't worry about what a fellow's going to do," John admonished him. "I'll do the doing. You leave it to me. In the meantime I see Skinny Garrison and Bill Reed speaking, and you had better get out and play with them."

"I don't want to play with those fellows!" Wilbur protested. "They're too rough. It always ends up in a fight, with one of them sitting on my neck. They're older and bigger."

John knocked the ashes from his pipe and stood up. "That's what you need, son. You go and play with Skinny and Bill; and you sit on their necks. Send them home with black eyes. When they get rough, get just a little rougher yourself."

So Wilbur went to answer Skinny's whistle, while John Ransom pulled a cap down over his forehead and made his way to the house next door. He had determined to tell the little vampire's mother a thing or two about his wishes in regard to Wilbur. He felt like Daniel entering a den, but Wilbur must be saved at any cost from the peril that lurked next door.

He mounted to the porch and pounded vigorously on the door, which was opened by a woman of perhaps thirty. She was plump and her hair was done up plainly yet attractively. It was nice brown hair, with beautiful touches of red. She was not such a vampirish looking person, but you never can tell.

"My name is—" John began, more civilly than he had intended.

"Yes, I know," she interrupted sweetly. "You're my next door neighbor. How do you do? Really I didn't expect a call so soon. But come right in."

John Ransom wanted to renege, but he felt himself carried into the house by a force more irresistible than physical strength.

While he ranted at himself under his breath for being a weak old fool, John was ushered through the hall into the living room. Soft words had cooled his fire, and he had no weapons of attack. He had forgotten how to deal with women, he guessed. But he would have his say, when opportunity offered.

He found himself deposited in a most comfortable chair, while the woman settled herself on the divan. He cleared his throat to give utterance to his message, but he found no way to begin. Confound it! Why had he thrust himself into such a helpless situation? "What's a fellow going to do?" he asked himself helplessly.

Slender fingers smoothed out the velvet of a divan cushion.

"I'm giving little Sue a birthday party," the woman announced, "and of course your son is coming. Sue likes him so much. Wouldn't you like to help decorate? And about the ice cream—do you think we ought to have plain vanilla or strawberry?"

Before John could get a grip on himself he blurted out:

"Well, I must confess a preference for strawberry; and I'm sure the children—"

Some time later, when John Ransom returned home, it might have been noticed that he wore an ornamental unusual for him. It was a smile.

But the smile vanished when he discovered a free-for-all fight taking place in his yard. As he entered, Wilbur sent Bill Reed sprawling on the lawn and then proceeded to lay out Skinny Garrison and find a seat for himself on the latter's neck. Wilbur grinned triumphantly at his father, but the father was not enthusiastic.

"Wilbur Ransom!" he called. "You get up immediately, and you, Skinny and Bill, you make tracks about as fast as you can travel. Wilbur, I'm ashamed! What would Sue Jefferson think? A common fighter?"

"But pa—" the common fighter protested, standing up and staring wide-eyed, while Skinny and Bill decamped, both crestfallen.

In the library John had recourse to his pipe, which he pulled on with avidity. Wilbur scowled. This father of his was beyond all understanding.

"Don't scowl, son," cautioned John. "It mars your rather—er—handsome face. And straighten your tie. I've been to see Sue's mother, and there's a big birthday party coming off over there. You're invited, because Sue likes you, and so am I, because they need somebody to decorate the house. Son, you need new clothes. How'd you like a nice sailor suit? And I wonder how a brown plaid suit would look on me—something with a sort of youngish cut?"

SIT ERECT AND LIVE LONG

Writer Asserts That Correct Position Has Much to Do With the Preservation of Health.

Man is built to sit. We used to think the horse was not mechanically equipped for that posture, but an observing correspondent corrected us. The cat and dog sit, and they seem to enjoy doing so.

Many contrivances for easy and comfortable sitting are in use—rocking chairs and easy chairs in a variety of shapes. Some doubt exists as to the wisdom of the habitual use of these conveniences built for lazy comfort. It is said that when one relaxes and leans back while at work, if he has a sitting job, that his back muscles become weak and the vital organs in the lower part of his body are thrown out of place. Long-continued easy sitting of this kind is likely to develop functional weakness, we are told.

We knew a man who learned to sit right—erect, with no back support. For many years his professional duties required him to sit, and very comfortable swivel chairs were provided for him. But he acquired the habit of sitting in the correct position with no back support, and could do so for five hours at a stretch without fatigue in the muscles of his back. He lived to a great age entirely free of all abdominal disorders—stomach, bowel, liver or kidney—and attributed the fact largely to his habit of sitting erect.—Chicago Journal of Commerce.

How Adder Controls Its Fangs.

The way that poisonous snakes use their fangs to inject poison is one of the most wonderful things in Nature, and in the case of some of them—for instance, the common adder or viper, which lives all over Europe—this poison fang and its venom are only used as a means of self-defense, or for getting food.

But the adder, as a rule, does not use its poison fang when it bites the animals on which it feeds, and so it has a very curious arrangement by means of which these fangs are laid back in the roof of the mouth and out of the way of the ordinary teeth, which are used for feeding. Thus the adder can use one or other sets of teeth just as it likes, when it kills its food, and it can tuck its fangs securely out of the way and use its ordinary teeth when it wishes to swallow a mouse. In some other poisonous snakes the fangs are fixed and can not be used in this way.

Highway Improvement

PUBLIC ROAD CONSTRUCTION

About One-Half of All Highways Being Built Are Being Aided by the Government.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

What the new federal highway appropriation to be expended under the direction of the bureau of public roads, United States Department of Agriculture, will mean to the country is accurately gauged in a synopsis prepared by the bureau, showing the use to which the $275,000,000 previously appropriated by congress has been put. Up to December 31, $212,077,240 had been put to work in projects either entirely complete or under construction. To match that amount the states appropriated $285,370,312, making a total of $497,456,558.

If placed end to end the roads to be paid for by this money would encircle the earth at the equator and extend as far as from New York to San Francisco on the second lap. The total mileage of roads under construction and completed, the department's records show, was approximately 27,000 miles. Of this mileage 9,555 miles was in projects entirely completed. The balance of 17,445 miles was in projects which were still under construction but reported 69 per cent complete October 31. In those projects there was the equivalent of 12,000 miles of completed roads, so that the completed road to date was more than 21,000 miles, or nearly enough to encircle the globe.

Prior to five years ago the federal government took no active part in the road construction of the country. Today about one-half of all roads under construction are being aided financially by the federal government, and the construction is subject to inspection and approval of federal engineers.

APPROVE HIGHWAY PROJECTS

According to Announcement of Bureau Every Type of Construction Is Represented.

Ninety-three road construction projects in 28 states were approved for federal aid during October by the bureau of public roads, United States Department of Agriculture, according to a compilation just made public. Virtually every type of construction is represented in the approved projects.

The states in which these projects were approved and the number of projects approved in each state follow: Alabama, 3; Arkansas, 3; California, 2; Colorado, 1; Florida, 1; Idaho, 1; Kansas, 8; Maryland, 3; Massachusetts, 2; Minnesota, 13; Mississippi, 6; Missouri, 4; Montana, 1; Nebraska, 2; Nevada, 1; New Mexico, 2; North Dakota, 2; Ohio, 2; Oklahoma, 1; Pennsylvania, 5; South Carolina, 5; South Dakota, 1; Texas, 8; Utah, 1; Virginia, 12; Washington, 1; Wisconsin, 2; and Wyoming, 1. The longest single stretch of roadway approved in one project during the month was an earth road in Calhoun county, Mississippi, 35.3 miles long; the shortest, 0.9 mile, was a brick road in Stark county, Ohio.

GOOD USE FOR SUBSTITUTES

Gravel and Macadam Can Be Employed Until More Durable Type of Road Is Built.

It will require several years for the United States to carry out the plans for a comprehensive system of hard-surfaced highways. Until such time as the main highways can be built of the durable type, gravel and macadam may be used as substitutes, but what the whole country wants and demands are real honest-to-goodness good roads.

One of Largest Industries.

Road building in the United States is one of the nation's largest industries, a million men being employed last year throughout the construction season at building or repairing the country's highways.

Asphalt Streets in Majority.

Virtually 61 per cent of all the municipal streets in the United States have an asphalt top. As a consequence of heavy truck traffic many of these streets are beginning to show serious evidences of disintegration.

SURE TO HELP SICK WOMEN

Mrs. Baker, So Much Benefited by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, Anxious to Help Others

Lebanon, Indiana.—"I was completely run down from women's troubles and for a long time was hardly able to do my work. I had some friends who had taken Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and they told me about it. I know what it has done for me and I recommend it to others, as I am sure it will be a great help to all sick women. It is a wonderful medicine, and I give you permission to use my testimonial and my photograph."—Mrs. EMMA BAKER, 510 S. East St., Lebanon, Indiana.

These letters recommending Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound ought to convince women of the great worth of this medicine in the treatment of ailments to which they are often subject.

Mrs. Baker calls it "a wonderful medicine." If you are suffering from troubles women often have, or feel all run down, without any ambition or energy for your regular work, take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. It is a natural restorative and should help you as it has Mrs. Baker and many, many other women.

ILLINOIS CENTRAL HOLDS AGRICULTURAL MEETINGS IN CRITTENDEN COUNTY THIS WEEK

During the past week the General Development Bureau of the Illinois Central Railroad has been co-operating with Mr. Spencer of the Crittenden County Farm Bureau in holding a number of dairy and poultry meetings throught the county. This department of the I. C. carries an electric generator which can be attached to any automobile to generate electricity enabling them to show their Agricultural moving pictures in the rural school houses.

The Illinois Central maintains this General Development Department with a view to helping the farmers along its lines. It employs experienced men along agricultural lines who study the problems of the farmers and hold farmer gatherings in the various communities for instructive purposes. Lectures followed by motion pictures bring home to the farmer some of the profitable practices they should adopt on their farms.

Poultry Raising

Mr. Farlow, Agricultural Agent for the I. C. gave several lectures on Poultry Raising, bringing out the fact that a larger income was being realized from poultry by the Kentucky farmer for the money invested than from any other form of live stock; giving many instances of Kentucky farmers who were realizing from one to four dollars profit for every hen kept on the farm. He also gave a good egg laying ration as follows:

Scratch Grain: 100 pounds cracked corn, 100 pounds wheat, 100 lbs hulled or ground oats.

Dry Mash: 100 lbs corn meal, 100 lbs bran, 100 lbs middlings, 100 lbs meat scraps or tankage, 4 pounds of salt.

The meat scraps and tankage furnishing the high protein feed necessary to large egg production. Skim milk or buttermilk can be substituted in place of meat scrap with equally good results. Grit as oyster shells or limestone should always be kept before the birds.

In feeding little chickens we must be careful to keep them away from wet or sloppy feeds. The chick is born with enough of the yolk of the egg to nourish it for at least 48 hours and should not be fed prior to that time.

Then they can be given a feeding of buttermilk and two or three hours after this a feeding of rolled oats which may be added a small amount of clean sand or fine charcoal.

The first week they should be fed every three or four hours. At the end of a few days the rolled oats may be gradually replaced with corn meal, bran and other grains increasing in coarseness as the chicken grows and is able to eat and digest this coarser grain. This feed will keep the baby chicks free from white diarrhea and if we are careful to select our hatching eggs from flocks which are free from white diarrhea we are apt to have little trouble from this disease.

Common diseases were taken up by Mr. Farlow and their causes and cures given. Among the most common of these rousp was mentioned. Rousp being most commonly caused by poor housing conditions. Once it gets in the flock it is apt to spread very rapidly. The affected birds should be couped up by themselves as soon as rousp is discovered and their heads washed off with a warm salt water solution which has a cleansing effect. Then put two teaspoonfuls of boric acid in a pint of water. Wash or dip their heads in this solution three times a day for three or four days. This will cure them. Then by remedying the cause of this disease in the poultry house we will be able to keep the flock free from rousp.

Lice and mites are also a great hindrance to egg production in the farm flocks and are not guarded against as they should be. Blue ointment when applied to the different parts of the chickens body most affected by the lice proves a good remedy. This should be rubbed well into the skin. Then it not only kills the lice that are on the chicken but also remains long enough to kill the lice which hatch later.

To rid the flock from mites we must clean and spray the poultry house. Any good creosote or wood preservative material when used in a spray gives excellent results and should be applied to all cracks crevices of the house, roosts and nests.

Culling the farm flock has become very practical. This enables us to get rid of the drones and increases our profits. August and September are the best months of the year to cull out these poor laying hens. The Hogan system is probably the most practical and common system used. Bullets can be secured on culling or any other poultry subjects in which we may be interested by writing to Kentucky University, Extension Dept., at Lexington, or to U.

WHY GOOD MEN QUIT

Go today into the Treasury department, the Department of Agriculture, the Department of Commerce, or into any other establishment of the government doing important technical work, and they will tell you that their chief difficulty is to retain competent employees in the supervisory and technical positions. Their turnover is abnormally high in these positions.

Every day men leave the service to accept private employment at materially increased salaries, so that the departments are continuously going through a process of selecting and training executives and technical employees, only to lose them, as they become really valuable, on account of the inadequacy of their compensation.

The second factor which contributes to the present inefficiency of the government as a business establishment is found in the improper organization of the executive branch of the government for effective service. You are familiar, at least in a general way, with the defects of the present administrative machinery.

You know for example, that the Interior department now has jurisdiction over a great number of bureaus of a miscellaneous character that have nothing to do with each other or with the functions which the Interior department was originally established to perform.

You know that many agencies have been located in the Treasury department, the great fiscal department of the government, which are purely non-fiscal in character, such as the coast guard, the public health service, the supervising architect's office and the bureau of war risk insurance.

You know that the great bulk of the civil public works of the government are executed under the supervision of the War department, although the bureau of public roads is located in the Department of Agriculture, and the reclamation service in the Department of the Interior.

You know, furthermore, of the independent existence outside the jurisdiction of any of the great executive departments of some 40-odd boards, commissions, offices and bureaus.

These are merely examples of a condition that would require volumes to describe fully, but it is generally known that the executive branch of the government is at the present time illogically and uneconomically organized in many important particulars. It should be remembered, however, that even with an ideal personnel and a perfect organization it is doubtful if the high degree of economy and efficiency that characterizes private business can ever be attained in the government offices. This is so because economies made by government officials are not transformed into dividends for themselves as they are in private business.

There is an impression in congress and throughout the country that men of great ability are not found in government service; that the salaries are not sufficient to attract and hold them. On the contrary, there are a great many people of distinguished ability in the government service. One is more and more impressed by that fact, especially since the war sent to Washington so many men of large means and famous names with whom the government employees could be compared. The comparison was time and again to the advantage of the government employee. But the salaries are not the attraction; it is the work itself. This is well understood by some eminent observers of public life. Secretary of State Hughes declared himself as follows before the advisory committee of the war risk insurance bureau:

It has been my experience that with the higher officers, the officers of greater institutions, where efficiency is rewarded by public representation—while the field is a limited one because of the great opportunity to men of ability—it is still entirely possible to draw to the public service men of great ability and distinction, because of the desire to render public service, and the number of men who are available for that purpose, while relatively small, is still sufficient if the appointing officer wants men of that class. In order to obtain them, however, he must give a free field. He must not interfere as to political action to control administration tendencies and must permit them to be given the reward which a well-conducted office of importance will give to its incumbent in the public estimation.

Now the difficulty increases when you pass those heads that get the credit and come to the technical expert who has got to do the regular work and upon whose efficiency the operation of the department finally depends. These men are little known. The public has not time even to learn their names. They are interested in work to a degree of being willing to make sacrifices.

There is active competition for men of brains and great ability of that sort, and the government will never be served unless it pays the price for those men. Now I think that is a plain situation. You may be able to get a director in the bureau of war risk insurance for $2,000 a year, or for nothing at all, but you cannot get an actuary. You cannot get insurance men. You cannot get experts—tendents. That would be my judgment.

VIEW OF THE EMPLOYEE

The obvious solution of the government's employment problem is the standardization and readjustment of salaries. To be scientific, such readjustment must rest upon a careful reclassification of the service. Conditions are very different now, both in regard to the functions of offices and the cost of living, from what they were when positions in the government service were first classified and salaries assigned to those positions.

It struck me that an interested party in this inquiry into how the government conducts its business was the employee himself. He ought to know from actual daily experience something about the mechanism of the national business and the relations between the working force and employer.

It was clearly impossible to talk to the more than 500,000 men and women who work for the government, but I learned that between 50,000 and 60,000 of them are banded together in an association called the National Federation of Federal Employees. It is a regular labor union, and is affiliated with the American Federation of Labor. It includes all classes of government workers, technical and scientific men, as well as clerks and unskilled workers.

I asked the president of this employees' union, Luther C. Steward, if he and his associates were authorized to speak for all its membership. He assured me that they were.

So I asked him to tell me about the conditions of government employment and how the business was carried on. I am glad I did, for what he told me discloses not only facts, but a state of mind existing among the employees which necessarily must be taken into account in any consideration of the efficiency and management of our common business. Here then is what the employees, who speak through Mr. Steward, have to say, and the constructive program they present for the improvement of the service:

The civil service on its human side consists of about 500,000 men and women engaged in the operation of an antiquated patched-up machine. Because of the durability of its vital parts and the faith and ability of the mass of the operatives the machine still functions. But the parts are ill-fitted, and many of them are defective. The managers and superintendents of the establishment, being too often chosen for political reasons, are frequently inept, and the operating system is clumsy and disjointed.

The employees are recruited under a law which provides a test of qualifications, and probably nine-tenths of the rank and file have satisfactorily passed the entrance test. But the better positions, say from $3,000 upward, are usually occupied by political appointees. Another considerable group of employees get their appointments by executive order, waiving civil-service tests of fitness.

The newcomer in the service, therefore, finds himself up against a minimum of opportunity for promotion, with the disheartening knowledge that the advancement which is earned by competence is all too likely to be given to the friend or political supporter of some congressman or executive who wishes to pay a political debt. And the employee is subject to dismissal at the will of the executive of his department, unless he can bring sufficient political influence to bear.

In other words, the civil-service law is not backed up by enforcing power in the Civil Service commission. It merely recruits the applicants for entrance. Thereafter the employee's fate is largely a matter of his own luck and negative passive merit. There is no system by which he may be fitted to the job, and no protection against dismissal, unless the employee himself can show that the reason is political or religious. "For the good of the service," as the law reads, covers every other charge which the executive official may bring. There is no court of appeal.

Such is the oppressive, incentiveless, vitilating atmosphere of the government service. It stifles initiative, frustrates ambitions and reduces the mass of employees to a more or less passive state, which is permeated by a sense of fear.

In such an atmosphere, naturally enough, the physical conditions of employment are far from what they should be, and the government loses efficiency, as does any other employer where the wage scale is inadequate and unstandardized, where sanitary conditions are bad and hours of work too long and irregular.

The wage scale is so low that the Civil Service commission has difficulty in securing properly qualified applicants, and throughout the service the turnover is high. Employees doing the same kind of work often receive widely different rates of pay; experienced workers often receive less than beginners, and virtually every kind of inequality and injustice exists.

"Yes," said Farmer George; "folks that have to run a farm don't git no time to die."
