CHAPTER XII.

Breakfast was over, and the girls were all busily engaged in the making of more bread and cakes. The kitchen was hot and stuffy, and the smell of the baking dough filled their nostrils. The morning sun shone through the window, casting golden rays over the scene.

“Will you go up with me, sugar?” asked Patty, as she stirred the boiling porridge in the kettle.

“No, thank you, I haven’t much of an appetite this morning,” replied Mary, who was just returning from the garden with a basket full of fresh vegetables.

“Anything for me?” asked Mary, as she handed over the vegetables.

“I’d like a little more sugar in my porridge,” replied Patty.

“Sugar? I thought you said you had no appetite,” said Mary.

“I was joking, sugar, I know you’d like it,” replied Patty, with a laugh.

“Shall I have a little more sugar?” asked Mary, as she stirred the porridge again.

“Thank you, sugar,” replied Patty, as she got up to leave.

“I’m going to the garden to pick some more vegetables,” said Mary, as she went out to the door.

“Aren’t you going to have your porridge?” asked Patty, as she looked back at Mary.

“I’m not hungry enough to eat it,” replied Mary.

“Then I’ll have it,” said Patty, as she went back to the table to eat her porridge.

“Thank you, sugar,” said Mary, as she smiled at Patty.

LIBRARY MADE GOOD GUESSES

My thanks to the New York Historical Society for making it possible for me to visit the library of the American Antiquarian Society in Worcester, Mass. and its unique collection of fine 18th and 19th century material. The library was founded in 1812 and is housed in a beautiful red-brick building. It is well worth a visit for anyone interested in American history and culture.
