VOCATIONAL EXPERT TO LECTURE HERE

Chautauqua Audiences Will Hear
Important Address.

Prof. Chester M. Sanford to Discuss
Problem of Avoiding the Misfit in Industry.

"What shall I do in the world?" is a great problem which interests all of us. Aid in the solution of this problem is afforded by the lecture, "Fallures of the Misfits," to be given here at the Redpath Chautauqua by Prof. Chester Milton Sanford.

Professor Sanford is an expert on vocational guidance. His lecture aims to guide the young people of the community into choosing their proper vocations—to help eliminate misfits in industry and the professions. Every person, young or old, who has the future of America at heart will be vitally interested in this lecture.

The tragedy in many lives is the attempt to succeed in one line of work when ability and inclinations point in an entirely different direction. Many a man who would succeed in business would be a failure as a physician and vice versa.

Professor Sanford's lecture gives valuable suggestions concerning the choosing of a vocation.

City Court News

On Wednesday, May 31, Billy Bryant swore out a warrant of arrest for Mrs. Grace Morgan charging disorderly conduct toward his wife and mother. Mrs. Morgan had a warrant issued for Billy, his mother, Mrs. Lee Bryant and Mrs. Joe Barnes.

These people are all neighbors and reside in the northeast section of the city, known as Boxville. This last trouble grew out of the killing of Mrs. Morgan's 17-year-old cat. The defendants did not deny slaying the cat, but affirmed that she had been killing their young chickens. The owner of the cat admitted that there had been young chickens killed but denied the guilt of her cat, affirming that she had seen another cat with a young chicken in its mouth.

After hearing the evidence City Attorney J. G. Rochester dismissed the case against Mrs. Joe Barnes and A. C. and Neville Moore, attorneys for Mrs. Morgan, made a motion for the dismissal of the case on account of her age, she being only 17 years old, which the court sustained. The cases against Billy Bryant and his mother were also dismissed and Judge Gilbert declared the court adjourned.

E. C. Lanham and R. F. Horning, charged with disorderly conduct, were before the court last week.

Horning was given a fine and Lanham was acquitted.

Court House News

Sheriff J. T. Wright reports that the biggest job on hand at his office now is the issuing and delivering at the hands of his deputies notification slips to the one thousand or more citizens all over the county and elsewhere informing them that their taxes have been raised.

"Do the fellows kick? Yes some of them kick like bay steers," said the Sheriff, "but as a general thing everybody takes it as something that has to be wrongfully induced."

HEREFORD SALE

W. R. Cruce will sell his entire herd of registered cattle at Princeton at 1:00 P. M. June 15. This will be an opportunity to buy well-bred cattle reasonable.

NEW GENERAL REGISTRATION ACT

Important Features of New Act Enacted by Last
General Assembly

It must be remembered that voters cannot register by mail. They must apply in person and in the precinct in which they are legal voters.

Each voter will be called upon to state his or her political affiliation. This may be given as "Independent," "Republican," "Democrat," "Socialist" and so on.

The penalties for fraud, illegal registration and interfering with registration are rather severe. If anyone disturbs or hinders the registration, he is guilty of misdemeanor and may be fined as much as one hundred dollars. A registration officer who fails to do his duty may be fined the same amount. Altering or destroying a registration book is a felony and may be punished by confinement in the penitentiary from one to five years. Anyone who breaks up or attempts to break up a registration may be fined from one hundred to five hundred dollars and imprisoned in the county jail from six to twelve months.

When the registration is finished, the registration books are to be taken to the County Court Clerk's office. The law does not say which officer or officers shall do this. It would be proper for at least two of the officers, one from each political party to go with the books to the clerk's office, as is done in case of elections.

The registration officers must be sworn before beginning their work. They can be sworn before any officer authorized to administer an oath. If it is not convenient to go before an officer, the registration clerk is authorized to swear the other three officers and then one of the judges can administer the oath to the clerk.

Persons who cannot read or write are entitled to be registered. If the voter can write his own name in the registration book he is required to do so. If he cannot write his name he should state that fact on oath to the registration officer and then the clerk will sign the voter's name for him.

THE REVIVAL MEETING

Rev. G. P. Dillon, pastor of the Methodist church, closed a one week series of revival meetings Sunday evening. Despite the warm weather the attendance at every evening service was good and the interest, especially among the young people, was splendid.

Evangelist Robert Lear is unexcelled as a choir leader and singer, and assisted by the children's choir, the young people's choir, as well as by the general choir and the church orchestra, the music was splendid and was pronounced to be one of the important features of the meetings.

While popular with all the church, Bro. Dillon seems to have a special facility to win the confidence and love of the children and the young people and a number of his discourses were directed to these. Five additions, four by profession and one by letter, were added to the church Sunday and seven infants received the rite of baptism. Evangelist Lear preached the closing sermon Sunday evening.

Farm Bureau Notes

Wheat Variety Tests

In last weeks paper the attention of wheat growers in the county was called to the wheat variety tests on Mr. J. I. Clement's farm. A more recent inspection shows some very interesting developments. The four varieties on test are Fulcaster, Currels Prolific, Ashland and Kamred with the beardless varieties making the best showing. The Kamred wheat is the old Kansas Red Wheat. The Ashland wheat at the present time is standing up best of all and gives indications of making the best yield. Mr. Kenny, crop specialist, from the Experiment Station made a count of the number of stalks per foot in three different places in each test plot and found the following averages: Ashland 35 stalks per foot, Currel's Prolific 25; Fulcaster 27; Kamred 30 and local Futlz 27. The Ashland wheat has been selected from the old Jersey Futlz by the Kentucky Experiment Station and has out yielded in most cases other Kentucky varieties. The wheat on the test plots will be harvested separately and an accurate record kept of the results.

In the mean time go and see this test. Mr. Kenny says it is one of the best variety tests in this part of Kentucky. It is along the road between the covered bridge and White Hall school in the corner of the field. From south to north the varieties are Kamred, Ashland, Currels Prolific and Fulcaster.

Swat the Rooster

Roosters allowed to run with poultry flocks during warm weather cause Kentucky poultry men and farmers an enormous loss each year in the form of fertile eggs that spoil on their way to the consumer, say poultry men at the College of Agriculture. The production of infertile eggs and the prevention of a large part of this loss requires that owners of laying hens sell, kill or confine all roosters as soon as the hatching season is over. A fertile egg may become unfit for food in 24 hours of warm weather while an infertile egg may be kept in an incubator at 103 degrees for seven days and still be good for cooking, says Mr. Martin head of the College Poultry Department.

Get rid of the roosters in warm weather the hens will lay just as well without them.

Equal parts of air slaked lime and tobacco dust or an equal parts of lead arsenate and air slaked lime mixed together and sprinkled around cucumber, melon and squash plants act as a repellent to the striped cucumber beetle which already is reported to be giving some trouble. Tobacco dust may be obtained by grinding tobacco stems.

Premium on Healthy Hogs

Many County Farm Bureaus have as a part of their program of work the eradication of tuberculosis. Now come the packers and announce that beginning July 1 and continuing thru a two year period thereafter they would pay a premium of 10 cents per hundred weight for hogs coming from counties free from tuberculosis. The above was taken from the American Farm Bureau weekly news letter of May 25th.

Marion's New Bakery

Elsewhere in this issue of the Press appears the announcement of Marion's New Pure Food Bakery, which will be opened for business on Friday of this week. For many years Marion has had need of a plant of this sort and the new plant which has during the last week been installed by the owner, Mr. E. R. Hutson, should please the most exacting. It is thoroughly modern and up-to-date in every way and is absolutely sanitary in every detail.

In an interview with Mr. Hutson the first of the week he mentioned the fact that he asked only one thing of those who liked good bread and that was the opportunity to show what his bread was like. The test of good bread is in the eating and Mr. Hutson is anxious to have you make the test.

When you call your grocer for bread ask him if it is Marion made. The Crittenden Press stands for Crittenden county first and we bespeak for Mr. Hutson a good trade and wish him the best of success in Marion.

SISTERS

CHAPTER XVII.

-16-

When Cherry came out to breakfast, a few hours later, she found Alix already at the porch table. Alix looked pale, but fresh and trim; she had evidently just tubbed, and she wore one of the plain, wide-striped gingham that were extremely becoming to her rather boyish type.

She looked up, and nodded at Cherry composedly. Cherry always kissed her sister in the morning, but she did not today. She felt troubled and ashamed, and instinctively avoided the little caress.

"No men?" she asked, sharing her grapefruit with her mail.

"Peter had to go to San Rafael with Mr. Thomas in his car, to do something about the case," Alix explained. "I drove them down, and at the last minute Martin decided to go. So I marketed, and got the mail, and came back, and the understanding is that we are to meet them at the St. Francis for dinner, at six, and go to the Orpheum."

"Is it almost ten?" Cherry said sleepily, gazing in surprise at the clock that was visible through the open door. "I'm terribly ashamed! And when did you get up, and silently make your bed, and hang up your things?"

"Oh, early!" Alix answered, non-committally. "I had a bath, and this is my second breakfast!"

Cherry, who was reading a letter, made some inarticulate sound that made Alix look at her in quick concern.

"Cherry, what is it?" she exclaimed.

For answer Cherry tossed her the letter, written on a thick sheet of lavender paper, which diffused a strong odor of scent.

"Read that!" she said, briefly.

Fearfully, Alix picked up the perfumed sheet, and read, in a coarse and sprawling, yet unmistakably feminine handwriting, the following words:

"Dear Mrs. Lloyd: Perhaps you would not feel so pleased with yourself if you knew the real reason why your husband left Red Creek? It was because of a quarrel he had with Hatty Woods."

"If you don't believe it you had better ask him about some of the parties he had with Joe King's crowd, and where they were on the night of Aug. 28, and if he knows anybody named Hatty Woods, and see what he says. Ask him if he ever heard of Poppe's hotel and when he was in Sacramento last. If he denies it, you can show him this letter."

There was no signature.

Alix, who had read it first with a bewildered and suspicious look, read it again, and flushed deeply at the sordid shame of it. She laid it down and looked in stunned conviction at her sister.

Cherry, who was breathing hard, raised her head, rested her chin on her hands, elbows on the table, and stared at Alix defiantly.

"There!" she said, almost with triumph. "There! Now, is that so easy? Now, am I to just smile and agree to say 'Certainly, Martin.' Of course, Martin, dear? Now you see—now you see! Now, am I to bear that? She rushed on, her words suddenly violent.

"And go on with him—as his wife—when a common woman like that—"

"Cherry, dear!" Alix said, distressedly.

"Ah, well, you can't realize it; nobody but the woman to whom it happens can!" Cherry interrupted her, covering her face with her hands.

"But let him say what he pleases now," she added, passionately, "let him do what he pleases—I'll follow my own course from today on!"

Alix, watching her fearfully, was amazed at the change in her. Cherry's eyes were blazing, her cheeks pale. Her voice was dry and feverish, and there was a sort of frenzy in her manner that Alix had never seen before. To bring sunny little Cherry to this—to change the radiant, innocent child that had been Cherry into this bitter and disillusioned woman—Alix felt as if the whole world were going mad, and as if life would never be sane and serene again for any one of them.

"Cherry, do you believe it?" she asked.

Cherry, roused from a moment of brooding silence, shrugged her shoulders impatiently.

"Of course I believe it!" she answered.

"But, darling, we don't even know who wrote it. We have only this woman's word for it—"

"Oh, look at it—look at it, Alix!" Cherry burst forth. "Do decent men have letters like that sent to their wives? Is it probable that a good man would do anything to rouse some busybody woman to write such a letter about him?"

"Well, but who is she, and what do you suppose she wrote it for?" Alix wondered.

"Oh, I don't know. She got mad at him, perhaps. Or perhaps she is a champion of this Woods woman. They had some quarrel—how do I know? But you can see she is mad, and this is the way she gets even!"

"Cherry, at least do Martin the justice to ask him about it!" Alix pleaded.

Her sister seemed not to hear her. The misery in her beautiful eyes made Alix's heart sink.

"And that," Cherry said in a whisper, "is my husband!"

She paused, staring down at the table, one hand supporting her forehead, the other wandering idly among the breakfast things. Her look was somber and far away. Alix, standing, watched her distressedly, through a long minute of silence.

"Well!" Cherry said lifelessly, looking up at her sister with dulled eyes. "What now? It's still 'for better or worse.' I suppose?"

Alix sat down, and for a moment covered her face with a tight-pressed hand. When she took it away there was new serenity and resolution in her tired face.

"No," she said, with a great sigh, "I think perhaps you're right! He hasn't—he should have no claim on you now!"

"Alix," Cherry demanded, "would you forgive him?"

"Perhaps I wouldn't," Alix said, after thought.

"Perhaps you wouldn't!" Cherry echoed, incredulously.

"Well, I'm not very good," Alix said, hesitatingly. "But a vow is a vow, you know. If it was limited, then my fulfillment of it would be limited. I suppose, of course," she added, honestly, "I'm talking for myself only!"

"And you would quietly forgive and forget!" demanded the little sister, in bitter scorn.

"I say I hope I would!" Alix corrected her. "Even if this is true"—she added, with a glance at the lavender letter—"still, I suppose the rule of forgiving seventy times seven times—"

Cherry interrupted her with a burst of bitter and rebellious weeping.

"Oh, my God, what shall I do!" she sobbed, with her bright head dropped on her arm.

"Don't cry, Cherry, Cherry!" Alix said, her own tears brimming over. She came to kneel beside her sister, and they locked their arms about each other, and their wet cheeks touched.

"Don't cry, dear!" she said, tenderly. "I'll all come straight, somehow, and we'll wonder why we took it so hard. Now listen to me, Sis, as soon as Cherry had somewhat regained her composure. "We'll ascertain about this letter; that's only fair. If Martin denies it—"

"Of course he'll deny it!" Cherry interrupted, from the bitter knowledge she had of him.

Alix again felt daunted for a second by the sheer ugliness and sordidness of the matter, but she returned to the charge bravely.

"Suppose we get Peter to ask him," she suggested suddenly. "Peter has a wonderful way of getting the truth out of people!" Poor Cherry, the very mention of his name makes her wince, Alix thought, watching her sister sorrowfully. "If Martin can convince Peter that it is not true, then that makes all the difference in the world," she added, aloud. "Then you tell Martin frankly that you have the old house ready to live in, and you want to live there. He—"

"He'll never agree to that!" Cherry said, shaking her head. "But if this is true?" she asked, again indicating the letter.

"Then tell him that unless he agrees absolutely to a separation," Alix said, "that you will get a divorce!"

"And live here, alone, under that sort of a cloud?" Cherry said, with watering eyes. "Oh, well!" she said, rising, and going toward the door. "It's horrible—horrible—horrible—whatever I do! Is this your idea—that we should dine, and go to the Orpheum tonight as if nothing had happened, and let all this wait until you can ask Peter to cross-examine Martin?"

"I wonder if Martin would tell me? Why couldn't I pretend that I opened that letter by mistake and frighten him into admitting it, if it's true?" Alix said.

"You could," Cherry admitted, lifelessly. "But you may be sure it is true enough!" she added.

"Then leave it to me!" Alix said. "And don't feel too sad, Cherry. You're young, and life may take a turn that changes everything for you. You always have Peter—Peter and me, back of you!"

"Alix, you're the best sister a girl ever had!" Cherry said, passionately, putting her hand on Alix's shoulder. "I wish I were as big as you are! And he's made me so wretched!"

Cherry, with trembling lips, "that sometimes I've been sick of life! But I will investigate this letter, and if it's not true, I'll try again. Alix! I'll go away with him, if he wants me, or I'll live here—and study French—and go to lectures with you—"

"You darling!" Alix said, with an aching heart.

That night it was simply managed that Martin should be next to Alix, in the log at the theater, and she began to question him seriously at once. All through the strange, unnatural day that followed her night of vigil

she had been planning what she should say to him, but she and Cherry had not spoken of the subject again. Cherry had dressed herself with her usual dainty care, and now, with the violets Alix had given her spraying to a great purple bunch at her breast, and her blue eyes ringed and thoughtful under her soft little feathered hat, she was so arrestingly lovely that Alix was well aware of the admiring glances from all sides to which she was so superbly indifferent.

"Martin," she began, "I read a letter intended for Cherry this morning. I—I open all the mail!"

She had to repeat it twice before he realized that there was something behind her earnest and significant tone. Then she saw him stop twisting his program, and veer about toward her. She murmured a question.

"Do I what?" he asked, in an undertone instantly lowered.

"Do you know a girl named Hatty Woods?" Alix repeated, cautiously.

All hope died when she saw his face. "What about her?" he asked, almost inaudibly.

"Somebody wrote this letter about her," Alix started, quickly.

"Who wrote you about her? What'd she say?" he demanded quickly.

"Just—I'll let you see it," she said. "I don't know who wrote it—it wasn't signed. Do you—do you know her? Do you know Hatty Woods? She said—"

The letter said—

"Oh, sure, I know what she'd say!" Martin conceded, furious at Alix's interference, trembling with anger and resentment, and only anxious to close the conversation. "I know all about her and her kind. I think I know who wrote that letter, too. You give it to me tomorrow and I'll manage it. There won't be any more!"

"Martin," Alix whispered, gravely. "If you have given Cherry any cause—"

Her voice fell, and there was a silence.

"There are a great many things in life that you don't understand, my dear sister-in-law," Martin said reluctantly, nettled. "A man's life is not as simple as that."

"I'll all come straight, somehow, and we'll wonder why we took it so hard. Now listen to me, Sis, as soon as Cherry had somewhat regained her composure. "We'll ascertain about this letter; that's only fair. If Martin denies it—"

"Of course he'll deny it!" Cherry interrupted, from the bitter knowledge she had of him.

"Do I what?" he asked, in an undertone instantly lowered.

"Do you know a girl named Hatty Woods?" Alix repeated, cautiously.

All hope died when she saw his face. "What about her?" he asked, almost inaudibly.

"Somebody wrote this letter about her," Alix started, quickly.

"Who wrote you about her? What'd she say?" he demanded quickly.

"Just—I'll let you see it," she said. "I don't know who wrote it—it wasn't signed. Do you—do you know her? Do you know Hatty Woods? She said—"

The letter said—

"Oh, sure, I know what she'd say!" Martin conceded, furious at Alix's interference, trembling with anger and resentment, and only anxious to close the conversation. "I know all about her and her kind. I think I know who wrote that letter, too. You give it to me tomorrow and I'll manage it. There won't be any more!"

"Martin," Alix whispered, gravely. "If you have given Cherry any cause—"

Her voice fell, and there was a silence.

"There are a great many things in life that you don't understand, my dear sister-in-law," Martin said reluctantly, nettled. "A man's life is not as simple as that."

"I'll all come straight, somehow, and we'll wonder why we took it so hard. Now listen to me, Sis, as soon as Cherry had somewhat regained her composure. "We'll ascertain about this letter; that's only fair. If Martin denies it—"

"Of course he'll deny it!" Cherry interrupted, from the bitter knowledge she had of him.

Alix again felt daunted for a second by the sheer ugliness and sordidness of the matter, but she returned to the charge bravely.

"Suppose we get Peter to ask him," she suggested suddenly. "Peter has a wonderful way of getting the truth out of people!" Poor Cherry, the very mention of his name makes her wince, Alix thought, watching her sister sorrowfully. "If Martin can convince Peter that it is not true, then that makes all the difference in the world," she added, aloud. "Then you tell Martin frankly that you have the old house ready to live in, and you want to live there. He—"

"He'll never agree to that!" Cherry said, shaking her head. "But if this is true?" she asked, again indicating the letter.

"Then tell him that unless he agrees absolutely to a separation," Alix said, "that you will get a divorce!"

"And live here, alone, under that sort of a cloud?" Cherry said, with watering eyes. "Oh, well!" she said, rising, and going toward the door. "It's horrible—horrible—horrible—whatever I do! Is this your idea—that we should dine, and go to the Orpheum tonight as if nothing had happened, and let all this wait until you can ask Peter to cross-examine Martin?"

"I wonder if Martin would tell me? Why couldn't I pretend that I opened that letter by mistake and frighten him into admitting it, if it's true?" Alix said.

"You could," Cherry admitted, lifelessly. "But you may be sure it is true enough!" she added.

"Then leave it to me!" Alix said. "And don't feel too sad, Cherry. You're young, and life may take a turn that changes everything for you. You always have Peter—Peter and me, back of you!"

"Alix, you're the best sister a girl ever had!" Cherry said, passionately, putting her hand on Alix's shoulder. "I wish I were as big as you are! And he's made me so wretched!"

Cherry, with trembling lips, "that sometimes I've been sick of life! But I will investigate this letter, and if it's not true, I'll try again. Alix! I'll go away with him, if he wants me, or I'll live here—and study French—and go to lectures with you—"

"You darling!" Alix said, with an aching heart.

That night it was simply managed that Martin should be next to Alix, in the log at the theater, and she began to question him seriously at once. All through the strange, unnatural day that followed her night of vigil

she had been planning what she should say to him, but she and Cherry had not spoken of the subject again. Cherry had dressed herself with her usual dainty care, and now, with the violets Alix had given her spraying to a great purple bunch at her breast, and her blue eyes ringed and thoughtful under her soft little feathered hat, she was so arrestingly lovely that Alix was well aware of the admiring glances from all sides to which she was so superbly indifferent.

"Martin," she began, "I read a letter intended for Cherry this morning. I—I open all the mail!"

She had to repeat it twice before he realized that there was something behind her earnest and significant tone. Then she saw him stop twisting his program, and veer about toward her. She murmured a question.

"Do I what?" he asked, in an undertone instantly lowered.

"Do you know a girl named Hatty Woods?" Alix repeated, cautiously.

All hope died when she saw his face. "What about her?" he asked, almost inaudibly.

"Somebody wrote this letter about her," Alix started, quickly.

"Who wrote you about her? What'd she say?" he demanded quickly.

"Just—I'll let you see it," she said. "I don't know who wrote it—it wasn't signed. Do you—do you know her? Do you know Hatty Woods? She said—"

The letter said—

"I know all about her and her kind. I think I know who wrote that letter, too. You give it to me tomorrow and I'll manage it. There won't be any more!"

Stories of GREAT INDIANS

ROMAN NOSE'S MEDICINE WAR BONNET FAILED HIM

A CHEYENNE war party was attacking a Mormon emigrant train on the Oregon trail. As one of its defenders dropped to the ground mortally wounded a magnificent proportioned warrior dashed forward to "count coup" (touch the fallen enemy). The hat of the dead man had fallen off, exposing his bald head. As the red man struck the dead emigrant he shouted to the other Indians: "Your Roman Nose has counted the first coup on the longest-faced white man ever killed!"

In many respects Roman Nose (Wuquini—"Hooked Nose") of the Northern Cheyennes was the ideal type of the Indian warrior. Although he was not a chief, incidents of his great strength, masterful personality and wonderful bearing are legion. Once in a buffalo hunt his brother-in-law drew his bowstring so powerfully that it broke. The arrow was thrown high into the air as the sinew snapped. Roman Nose happened to ride up close behind his companion at this instant. Reaching up he caught the shaft, snapped it against his own bowstring and shot the buffalo dead.

A man of more reckless daring in battle never lived. He had a war bonnet, the wearing of which he fondly believed protected him from danger. His faith in it was justified until the day of the famous fight with Gen. G. A. Forsyth's 52 scouts at Beecher's Island, Colo., on September 18, 1898. Before going into the battle Roman Nose told his companions that he felt sure he would be killed that day. According to the belief the power of the war bonnet would fail if he ever ate anything that was taken from a dish with an iron utensil.

That morning at a feast given by his friends the Sioux, one of the women who served the meal had used a fork to take the food from the frying pan. When his friends learned of this they urged him to go through the ceremony of purification necessary to restore the power of the war bonnet, but Forsyth's scouts appeared before he could do so.

Therefore with the certain knowledge that he would be killed, Roman Nose assembled his warriors and led them on a charge against Forsyth. He almost rode over two of the scouts who were concealed in some high grass a short distance from the main command. One of these men fired. The Cheyenne fell from his horse, shot through the back and mortally wounded. That evening at sundown Roman Nose died. The strong medicine of his war bonnet had failed him at last.

SATANTA OF THE KIOUAS, AS "ORATOR OF THE PLAINS"

SATANTA (Set-t'ainta—"White Bear"), chief of the Kiouas, acquired the sobriquet of "Orator of the Plains" at the famous Medicine Lodge treaty in 1867 where he made the leading speech in reply to the government commissioners. "I love the land and the buffalo and will not part with them," he declared. "I have heard that you intend to settle us on a reservation near the mountains. I don't want to settle. I love to roam over the prairies. There I feel free and happy, but when we settle down we grow pale and die."

He had uttered the creed of the nomadic plains Indian and he backed up his words with deeds. He was a daring leader and a merciless foe. He literally painted the southern plains red, his favorite color. On the warpath he daubed his face, hair and the upper part of his body with crimson and he painted his tepee entirely red, with streamers of the same color at the ends of the poles.

"Satanta is a fine-looking Indian, energetic and sharp as a briar. He puts on a good deal of style at his meals and spreads a carpet for his guests to sit on. He has painted fireboards for tables and a brass French horn which he blows vigorously when the food is ready," writes a government physician who was his guest in 1865.

Satanta was a grim humorist. Once at Fort Dodge Gen. W. S. Hancock gave him a major-general's uniform and the Kiowa showed his appreciation of the gift by putting it on and leading an attack on the post.

Some time later Satanta had the opportunity to visit Fort Harker clad in his general's uniform and riding in a government ambulance, drawn by eight mules, an equipage which he had captured in one of his raids. With a brawny Indian driver lashing the mules to top speed, Satanta, dashed into the fort and announced that he had come to make a formal call on Gen. A. N. Sully who was visiting there.

In 1871 Satanta was sentenced to life imprisonment in the Texas state penitentiary for having killed several whites in that state. After two years he was released. In 1874 the Kiouas went on the warpath again and although Satanta had no part in the outbreak, he was taken back to prison. On October 11, 1878, he killed himself by jumping from an upper window of the hospital where he lay ill.

Freight Rate Cut Which Will Save People $400,000,000 a Year Is Ordered.

SHOULD REVIVE BUSINESS

No Let-Up in Attack on Attorney General Daugherty—Bankers Meet in Paris to Solve International Loan Problem—Communist Outbreak in Bulgaria.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

FOR some time President Harding has been striving to bring about a general agreement by the railways of the country to reduce freight rates materially and voluntarily, accepting the opinion of many experts that lower rates are essential to the recovery of business in the United States. He called a number of railway executives to a conference in the White House and laid the case before them, and they named a committee of their members to co-operate with the interstate commerce commission in attempting to realize the President's wishes. This looked promising until Mr. Harding a few days later admitted that the railway chiefs had so clearly presented to him the difficulties of the situation that he was not very sanguine of success.

Then the interstate commerce commission by itself came to the rescue and on Wednesday announced a decision in accordance with which rates on nearly all classes and commodities of traffic will be reduced on July 1 by amounts equal to 10 per cent of their present levels. The chief commodities excluded from the reduction are agricultural products in all sections outside of New England, live stock and western grain and grain products. The order reaffirms the reduction of 10.5 per cent in the western hay and grain rates last fall and the cut of 10 per cent made voluntarily by the roads on agricultural products, January 1.

According to the estimates of experts, the reductions mean a saving of approximately $400,000,000 a year in the rail transportation bills of the American people. The farmers alone, they say, will benefit to the extent of some $127,000,000 a year on goods that they buy normally. The cut is expected to increase buying and thus stimulate industry and diminish unemployment. On this there is general agreement among manufacturers, merchandisers and bankers.

Many of the rail executives were not only surprised by the commission's decision, but also quite disgruntled, holding that the reduction should have been postponed until the roads had accumulated more funds through increased earnings. Others, however, admitted that the loss in freight revenue probably would be more than offset by increase in traffic.

The interstate commerce commission included in its decision the determination of 5.75 per cent as the reasonable annual return for carriers on their capital investment, as compared with the 6 per cent level previously fixed. The new figure really amounts to 0 per cent, since the federal corporation income taxes are subtracted from earnings before profits are figured.

Another part of President Harding's plan was a voluntary acceptance of a reduction of wages by the railway brotherhoods. At present there is little prospect of this, but the railway labor board is expected to make a decision soon on wage questions that have been pending before it, the finding to be based solely on evidence presented in the hearings. It is estimated by the bureau of railway economics that railway labor board orders to date are saving the roads $300,000,000 a year in reduced wages, so much of the freight reduction seems already to have been unloaded.

ATTORNEY GENERAL DAUGHERTY'S course in relation to war contract frauds and his alleged connection with the securing of Charles W. Morse's release from the Atlanta penitentiary continue to supply the "warmest" of the news from Washington. Senator Caraway of Arkansas is the most persistent of those attacking Daugherty, and the latter made the assertion that the senator was actuated to throw a screen about men guilty of war frauds. To this Caraway responded with a challenge to the attorney general during him to bring about a congressional investigation to determine the truth of his charges. Said the Arkansasian:

"I defy Daugherty to ask the senate to pass a resolution for an investigation. If he does not do it, he stands convicted before the public as the man who has entered into a corrupt agreement to defraud the government, although he is the attorney general; and if his party will not let him be investigated his party must take the responsibility for not doing it. He said certain things were true. I say when he said it that he uttered a willful and malicious falsehood."

THE house has not yet acted on the resolution providing for a congressional investigation of war fraud charges, which was introduced by Representative Woodruff of Michigan. Senator Norris of Nebraska was quoted as saying that if the house did not speedily pass this resolution, a similar one would be introduced in the senate from the Republican side. Altogether, the situation of the attorney general is decidedly uncomfortable.

TOM WATSON, the eccentric senator from Georgia, had one of his "spells" last week and tried his best to get into a fist fight with Senator Phipps of Colorado. Watson was angry over Phipps' action in regard to certain Georgia postoffice nominations and during a session of the senate he began a furious verbal attack on the Coloradoan. They then went outside the main doorway and Watson roundly cursed Phipps, shouting: "If you will come down off that step, I'll knock your face in with my fist." Phipps, declining the challenge to combat, called a sergeant-at-arms, and the raging Watson was led away by Senator McNary.

NOTHING doing yet in the matter of a senate bill for soldiers' bonus. The Republican members of the finance committee last week found themselves evenly divided between Smoot's plan for paid-up insurance policies and McCumber's plan for certificates on which the service men could borrow. It was thought for a time that President Harding might express a preference, but he evidently was determined the senators should extricate themselves as best they might. Then the Republicans decided to call in the Democratic members of the committee to aid in drafting a bill. It was said the Democrats rather favored the McCumber plan.

THERE was a prospect last week that the German reparations crisis, due on May 31, would be averted. The allied reparations commission was considering offering Germany indefinite postponement of the ultimatum date on condition that she accept essentially the commission's full program. Such an arrangement was thought to be advisable in order to give time to the international bankers' committee, which met Thursday in Paris. Four solutions of the international loan problem were presented to the bankers at their opening session. J. P. Morgan submitted what he termed the American plan, and the others were offered by Sir Robert Kindersley, one of the governors of the Bank of England; Charles Sargent, former French undersecretary of finance and president of the Banque de l'Union Parisienne, and Dr. G. Vissering, president of the Netherlands bank. The sessions were private and the public was not given any hint of what the plans were. However, it was understood to be the opinion of the financiers that if any loan to Germany were arranged, it must be very large, probably at least a billion dollars. It also seemed likely that it would be necessary, in that case, for Belgium to surrender, partially her priority on German reparations, for Great Britain to reduce her proportion of 22 per cent of the reparations, and for France to cut down her expectations of cash payments.

PREMIER STAMBOULISKY of Bulgaria had some private conferences with M. Tchitcherine of Russia when they were at Genoa, and the result appears to be that the Bulgarian government, formerly the declared opponent of bolshevism, has changed front and will line up with the soviet republic and make its international policies conform to those of Russia, Germany and Turkey. This will not only present a solid combination against the allies and the little entente, but also will have its effect on the Thracian question, for the Bulgars have always sided with the Turks against the Greeks there.

The Bulgarian communists started some kind of an uprising a few days ago and at first it was reported they had seized the government and that King Boris was a fugitive. This was false, and it appeared the row was mainly an attempt by the communists to force the removal of Wrangel's anti-bolshevik Russians from the country. The rebels really did begin a march on Sofia, but the army remained loyal and drove them off.

CHARLES R. CRANE of Chicago, former American minister to China, is a great traveler but he is not likely for some time to visit France or any French possessions. Word has come from Syria that a French military court in Damascus, after a hearing by default, has found Mr. Crane guilty of inciting the recent uprising in the French mandate and sentenced him to twenty years in prison. A woman Moslem teacher who was involved in the outbreak was one of those selected by Mr. Crane to receive educational benefit in the United States. He gave her his check for $1,000 for traveling expenses and this gave rise to the charge that the American government was subsidizing the rebels.

MICHAEL COLLINS, head of the Irish Free State provisional government, and De Valera have signed a compact regarding the coming elections, and the latter seems to have got the best of it. The agreement virtually will result in the re-election of the present membership of the Dail Eireann, so that the De Valera republicans will again have nearly half the seats notwithstanding the fact that they represent less than 20 per cent of the electorate. The British government is much exercised by the status of affairs, realizing that the treaty is in danger.

Whatever condition of temporary peace may obtain in southern Ireland, the warfare between that part of the island and Ulster has acquired new vigor, due to the outrages perpetrated by Sinn Feiners. Among these was the murder of a member of the Ulster parliament. This so enraged the Belfast government that 300 Sinn Fein leaders—all that could be caught in the Ulster counties—were seized in surprise raids and thrown into prison. Premier Craig told parliament forcible action was demanded, and he issued a regulation declaring that membership in the republican army was an offense in itself. His energetic measures did not stop the operations of the bombers and snipers.

AT LEAST one interesting fight may be expected at every convention of the American Medical association. In last week's sessions of the organization in St. Louis the contest arose over the practice of "group medicine" or clinics. The committee on amendments to the constitution proposed new sections declaring against this practice, which, however, cannot be acted on for one year. Immediately afterward announcement was made of the organization of the Association of Group Clinics of North America, an independent medical association.

ANOTHER step toward the consummation of the Great Lakes-St. Lawrence waterway project has been taken by the government. An announcement by the State department says it has informed Canada "that the United States government would be glad to take up with the Canadian government the negotiation of a treaty looking to the deepening of the waterways which would enable ocean-going ships to reach the Great Lakes."

Getting Patients for Dr. Hill

By JANE OSBORN

© 1922, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.

When Dr. Polly Hill decided on the north end of Hillsboro as the location for her office after she had finished her hospital training, it was not because that part or any part of Hillsboro offered a strikingly good field for the initial efforts of a woman physician. It was because of Bob, Polly's brother. Bob was a freshman at Hillsboro college, and if it were possible for him to live at home with Polly then expenses would be kept down. And this was necessary, for almost all of the little few thousand dollars left by their parents had been used up on Polly's medical education and Bob's preparation for college. Polly was determined to succeed and to do that promptly, for she had Bob as well as herself to support.

It was the afternoon of the morning after Polly's shingle had been hung in state over the front door of the little white cottage in Hillsboro. Polly had made some purchases in the center of town, had met Bob, who was needed to help her carry home her bundles, and they were returning in the gloaming that is deep at six on December evenings.

A fine snow was falling from a winterless sky. They walked together barely hearing their own feet fall on the path.

"Had any patients yet?" asked Bob, who had roseate expectations for his sister.

"Of course not, yet," she said. "I won't have any patients for a week, maybe months. I only hung out my shingle this morning."

"I don't see as there is any nourishment in shingles," commented Bob. "But I've got an application in at the office for tutoring. I may get some boys from preparatory school. I suppose I'll have to cultivate a dainty appetite now, for a while."

"It's not as bad as that, Bob," said the little doctor, more anxious than she wished to show. "We'll have plenty of plain food."

"How are you going to get the patients?" demanded Bob bluntly. "Couldn't you put an advertisement in the paper or something? People have got to learn about you some way."

"Bob don't you know that doctors never do that? It wouldn't be professional."

"Well, honestly, sister, how are you going to get any customers—patients, I mean. Guess I'll go canvass the neighborhood. What commission would you give me for every new patient I bring? Look at me, gentlemen, I'd say, 'aren't I a good healthy specimen? Well, she's my doctor, and she always will be.'"

"Bob!" protested Polly, still relieved by her brother's foolishness from the anxiety of his that hung about her big undertaking.

"I'll tell you what we'll do. We'll pour some water out in front of the door some night when it is freezing. Make it nice and slippery and then we'll get some sprained ankles, any way. Maybe a couple of broken legs, too. How would that be?"

"Fine, Bob. I always knew you'd turn out a genius."

A half an hour later Polly and Bob were seated opposite at their little dining table before the platter of tempting stew that Polly had prepared at as small a cost as possible.

"Say, Polly," said Bob, "maybe before I go on with dinner I better shovel the snow out in front. It's snowing pretty steadily now. What do you think?"

"Certainly you'll do nothing of the sort. You are tired out from a hard day at college, and you must eat and rest a little first. Time enough if you do it before we go to bed."

So the meal progressed and later a merry dishwashing session in the kitchen, where Bob gave Polly an imaginary lecture on dishwashing as he wielded the dish mop and splashed his big hands about in the hot soap-suds.

Then came a feeble knock at the door, then a knock that was more vigorous. Bob quickly dried his hands on the kitchen towel, slipped into his coat and hurried to the door.

"Flash on the porch light before you open the door," said Polly, and they both went toward the front hall. When they first looked out on the front porch they could see no one; that was because the person who had knocked at the door was lying limp beneath the folds of a heavy ulster just before the threshold.

It proved to be Bronson Todd, the mayor of Hillsboro, and it was no very easy task for Bob to carry the prostrate six-foot mayor into the reception room of the little white cottage. With Polly's help he spread him out on the lounge and then the eyes opened and looked out at first in perplexity.

Explanations did not follow, were not even permitted by Doctor Hill, who was at once immensely professional and not at all rattled even if it was her very first case, until after the patient had been examined. There was a rather badly sprained ankle and a bruised knee. The mayor had fallen on the sidewalk in front of the house and only lost consciousness after he had managed to drag himself up the front steps and to knock at the door.

Dr. Polly Hill made the mayor of Hillsboro as comfortable as possible and after he had rested for a little while brought him a cup of tempting broth—a by-product of the expensive stew dinner time—which the patient drank with relish.

"I was going to suggest," began the young doctor, a little less bravely than might be, "that it would be better for you to rest here, possibly all night. The slightest effort might cause pain to the strained tendons, and my brother could lie on a cot in the next room so that if you wanted anything, in the meantime, hadn't we better telephone to Mrs. Todd? She may be anxious."

"Oh, there's no Mrs. Bronson Todd," said the patient with a smile that seemed to irritate Polly. He seemed to be pleased to think that he was a bachelor. He was just the good looking sort of well-built young man who ought to be ashamed not to be married by thirty, and he must be thirty. Who ever heard of a mayor under thirty? Still he wasn't the least gray—"But you might telephone to the steward at the club," Mayor Todd interrupted Polly's musings. "I live at the club, and he takes a sort of interest in me."

Polly gave her brother instructions for this telephone message. Then she approached the prostrate mayor with another suggestion.

"Possibly you would like to have your own doctor?" she said.

"I am with my own doctor," he said. "This is the first time that I have had a doctor, well, since I was twelve, and had the measles. I've never needed one. I am perfectly satisfied."

When Polly saw her brother after the patient was asleep on the reception room lounge she could no longer conceal her own anxiety. "He slipped on our front walk. You said you wanted to shovel it. It was all my fault—and after what we said about getting patients, oh, it was dreadful even to joke about anything so serious."

When it was decided that the young mayor could be moved via motorcar to his club the next afternoon, he said frankly that he was sorry to go. "Doctor," he said, "you'll look after the case, won't you? Perhaps you'd better drop in tomorrow. In the meantime I'd feel better if I settled my account for as far as it has gone. You have had to devote your entire time to this case."

"But, of course, there are to be no charges," said Dr. Polly Hill, turning rather pale. "It was our fault that you slipped. We hadn't shoveled our walk. We should at least stand all the doctor's fees. You might ask damages, besides."

The mayor smiled. "Who ever heard of such a thing? You might think that you had deliberately made that walk slippery so as to get patients." He looked into Polly's blue eyes and laughed again, and Polly looked very much distressed and the mayor was sorry that he had teased her.

So that was the beginning of the chain of events that led to the marriage that spring of Hillsboro's young mayor and her youngest doctor. The little white cottage, somewhat enlarged, became the mayor's residence, and the mayor consented to his wife's request to continue her work as a children's specialist, providing that she would doctor the poor of the town without charge.

It was the day before their wedding that they recalled together the events of the day of their meeting. "I was distressed because it really was our fault that you slipped, and only an hour before Bob and I were jokingly saying that we would have to get patients just that way."

"And I," confessed the mayor, "was walking not far behind you at the time. It was a silent, snowy night. You didn't hear me, but I heard what you said. So—well, I wanted to know you better—so I decided I'd pretend to slip on your front walk anyway, so you'd have to take me in. But when I was getting ready to fake a fall I took a real one."

IMPOSSIBLE TO FIX DATE

Exact Time of the Birth of the Savior Has Never Been Absolutely Determined.

The exact date of Christ's birth is not known. The Oxford Cyclopaedia Concordance says: "It is very perplexing to many to find that Jesus was born four years before the time from which we count his birth. The simple reason is that no one calculated dates from the birth of Christ until centuries after he was born, and then Dionysius Exiguus, the monk who published the calculations in A. D. 525, made a mistake of four years. He placed the birth of Christ in the year of Rome (A. U. C.) 754. But Herod the Great, who slew the innocents of Bethlehem, died in April in the year of Rome, 750, so that Christ must have been born several months before or not later than the last of 749. Jesus probably was born at the very close of 5 B. C., which would be only four years before our era, for in a week after December 25, 5 B. C., it was January, 4 B. C. Since it is impossible to rectify the dates in all books and records over the world, we simply apply the true date to the life of Christ. He was five years old at the close of A. D. 1."

A medicine that has been in use nearly fifty years and that receives the praise and commendation of mothers and grandmothers is worth your consideration.

If you are suffering from troubles that sometimes follow child-birth bear in mind that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is a woman's medicine. It is especially adapted to correct such troubles.

The letters we publish ought to convince you; ask some of your women friends or neighbors—they know its worth. You will, too, if you give it a fair trial.

No Improvement.

WILL FEDERAL HIGHWAY BE BUILT THIS YEAR?

Will the road from Salem to Marion, a section of the Federal Highway, known as the Ohio River route from Paducah to Louisville be built this year?

The Federal Government has appropriated fifty million dollars for road construction this year. It is not known yet just what Kentucky's part will be, but at the April meeting of the State Road Commissioners Crittenden county was promised that if the Government did make the appropriation, we should get the road from here to Salem this year.

So Judge Travis, with others will go to Frankfort, June 12, to see that the State Board makes good the promise and give us this road this year. It is hoped that the Judge and the others will be able to bring the road back with them, or the "where-with" with which to build it.

TRAINING CAMP OPENS AUGUST 1

Government Anxious for Young Men To Take Advantage of This Opportunity

Major C. T. Smart, U. S. Army, was in Marion last week in the interest of the C. M. T. C. or Civilian Military Training Camp. Judge C. S. Nunn is the local Chairman of the Training Camp Association and he has the necessary application blanks and will be pleased to assist any young man submit his application. Dr. T. A. Frazer will make the physical examination without cost to the applicant. The camp will be at Camp Knox, about 25 miles from Louisville and will last one month, August 1st to 31st.

The government is anxious to have young men between the ages of 17 and 25 years to take advantage of this opportunity. All expenses are paid from the time the young man leaves home until he returns a month later. This includes railway fare, meals, clothing, equipment, etc and all medical and dental attendance is free.

There will be about 3000 at the camp from Indiana, Ohio, West Virginia and Kentucky. This leaves about 750 to each state or an average of about five to a county so the sooner the applications are submitted the better.

The training while at the camp will combine military and physical instruction. There will be opportunity for play, recreation and entertainment. Athletics including group games, field and track sport and mass play have a place in the training program. Bands, orchestras and entertainments will be organized among the students.

The improvement shown at the end of a months training is wonderful, while there they are under the observing eyes of experienced officers, they will learn the meaning of discipline, develop alertness and self reliance, body and mind and will return at the end of the month's training bigger, better boys. They get new ideas while working and playing with the other boys from other states and by rubbing shoulders with them they get a broader idea of citizenship.

Their welfare is carefully guarded. Their religious faith may be followed at the camp. Religion is both respected and encouraged in the Army.

The Commanding officer at Camp Knox invites the parents to visit the camp while their sons are there and see how they live and learn. There is a hostess house at the camp for the convenience of the young men and their friends who may visit them while there.

While at the camp a strict but not harsh discipline is enforced at all times.

Talk it over, applications should be submitted not later than June 5.

IN MEMORIAM

In loving memory of our dear mother, Mrs. E. A. Bennett, who departed this life, May 21, 1921.

Dearest mother how we miss you:

Tears of silence often flow.

Memory keeps you ever near us.

The you died one year ago.

Peaceful be thy sleep dear mother.

It is sweet to breathe your name.

In life we loved you dearly.

In death we do the same.

Neath our eyes she faded slowly

Growing day by day more frail

Bearing sweetly all her sufferings

Without murmur, moan or wail.

You are sleeping, dearest Mother

Where the golden waters flow

And we know you are happy

In your everlasting home.

Sadly missed by Children.

Avoid World's Blind Alleys.

The young man of today does not have to follow the job his father had unless it's the job best suited for him. The wise youth finds out what most appeals to him, and then sees to it that he's the best fellow in that business. Such fellows rise to success in spite of handicaps. Then the world wonders and applauds. It's folly to remain cooped up with limitations when you might just as well be enjoying the fullest liberty. If by chance you get into a blind alley see to it that you get out at once.—Grit.

Mr. and Mrs. S. L. Carnahan and children were called to Blackford Wednesday by the serious illness of Mrs. Carnahan's mother, Mrs. J. E. White.

Hail Insurance Rates Reduced on Tobacco

With the recent reductions of hail storm insurance rates on growing tobacco, in the face of the enormous losses to growers within the last four or five years, every grower can afford to protect himself to the limit and, with safety, go into the business of producing a crop that requires so much money, time and labor, as does tobacco, that should be insured against loss by hail storms.

Now that so many growers have gone into an organization for a more economical, business-like way of handling their crops, and the insurance companies have so lowered rates on hail insurance, there is no reason in the world for any grower to neglect the protection of his crop by ample insurance.

Better see your insurance agent right away and have him protect your crop, which is likely to be destroyed any day by a hail storm. Policies become effective noon, July 10th.

Special Children's Entertainments Popular Chautauqua Feature

Four unique children's entertainments will be given at the coming Redpath Chautauqua in addition to the regular programs for adults, each of the entertainments for the youngsters being given on a different day.

The other entertainments will be "Characters from the Story Books" presented by Kathleen Scott and Catherine Denny, and a popular concert by the Cramer-Kurz Trio. The children's programs will be given either in the morning or in the afternoon.

PRECISION plays an important part in the manufacture of the Special-Six. It is largely responsible for the dependable service that has singled out the Special-Six as an incomparable value.

Six hundred and eighty inspectors safeguard precision in the Studebaker factories. They literally inspect every part that goes into every car—and every operation on every part. Before cars are passed for delivery 9,500 inspections are made.

In the Special-Six there are 1,120 mechanical operations to the accuracy of one-thousandth of an inch, 360 to one-half-thousandth.

As to the car's performance, a brief experience will reveal its superiority far more convincingly than we could tell it.

Studebaker cars make friends quickly, because they give most for the money. And they invariably keep these friends, because of the universal satisfaction they give in fine performance, economy and service.

CRYSTAL DETECTOR EASY TO CONSTRUCT

Telephone Condenser and Receivers Can Better Be Purchased—Mounting the Set.

The material needed to construct a simple crystal detector is as follows:

Piece of silicon or galena molded in a metal button, 25 cents.

Two binding posts, 20 cents.

A block of shellacked or stained wood 3 by 3½ inches.

A thin strip of sheet copper or brass ¼ inches wide by two inches long.

Mount the two binding posts on the block of wood as shown, fastening under one binding post a strip of copper or brass—see sketch—and under the other binding post a coiled up spring of fine springy copper or brass wire. By placing the button of metal con-ments, the tuner, the crystal detector and the telephone condenser, can be mounted on a stained base of wood, say, eight inches square and one-half inch thick. This will keep the component parts of the set together, making a compact unit of the whole and also be advantageous in that it will hold the instruments while adjustments are being made.

The sketch shows how the instruments are connected with each other and to the ground. The condenser is connected to one side of the tuner and to the crystal detector. The ground is connected to the other side of the phones and the condenser and the tuner.

Lamp cord is excellent for connecting up small radio sets of this kind—it being a good conductor, well insulated and easy to handle.

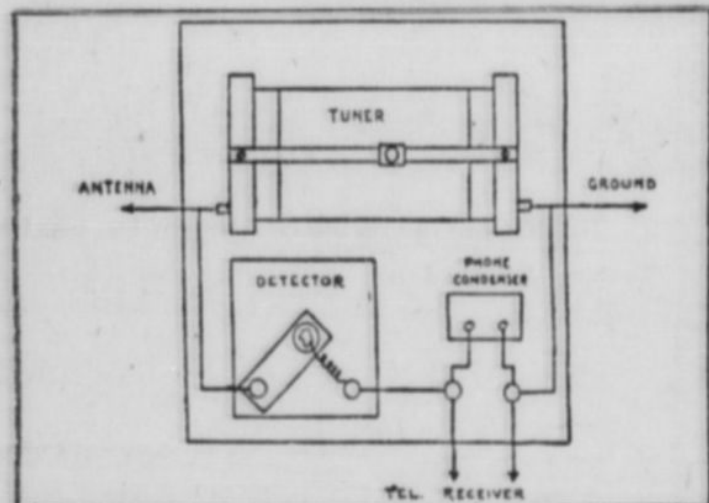

HOW TO LISTEN IN

There are two variables in our radio receiver that require adjustment when it is desired to listen-in; first, the detector, and second, the slide position on the tuner. Once the slider position has been determined for any given transmitting station, it is only necessary to adjust the detector to pick up that same station again.

To operate the receiver for the first time it is best to wait until some station like KDKA is transmitting between 8:30 and 9:30 p. m. Then ad-

The Crystal Detector.

Set Mounted on Base, With Connections Shown.

taining the crystal of silicon or galena on the strip of metal and allowing the spring to make contact with the surface of the crystal the detector is complete and ready for operation.

A complete crystal detector can be purchased from 75 cents to $2, depending upon the type.

Two other pieces of apparatus are necessary that cannot be readily constructed—they are the telephone condenser and the receivers. A telephone condenser to be used in shunting across the phones can be purchased for about 50 cents.

For use with a radio receiver of this type it is recommended that a pair of 3,000-ohm, Murdoch type, No. 55 receivers, costing $6, be purchased. These are all the necessary parts needed for the complete receiver.

If it is desired, the three instrujust the detector by changing the point at which the spring and crystal of the detector make contact until, when a nearby electric light is snapped on and off, a click is heard in the head phones. By changing the slider position, the transmitting station should be picked up.

After a station is once picked up it is an easy matter to adjust the detector and slider position until maximum response is obtained in the telephone receiver. With a simple set of the kind described in this and preceding articles and a little practice one soon becomes adept at picking up a given station. The entertainment derived from listening-in is usually well worth the time spent and the money invested.

VAGARIES OF VACUUM TUBES

Peculiar Actions That Always Astonish and Sometimes Frighten the Amateur Radioist.

Everybody who has had anything to do with vacuum tubes has from time to time had them do unexpected things and give results that at the moment seem beyond explanation.

The explanation of several characteristics of these miniature giants which are met with in daily operation is sure to prove of great interest to the amateur. In cases where the actions of the tube are not understood those peculiarities have sometimes frightened people.

One instance of a newborn fan's fright was brought to attention in a letter of inquiry. The instrument had just been set up and was being operated for the first time. The tubes had been firmly adjusted and were just at the spinning point and—over they went, giving vent to the most unearthly sounds. The embryo enthusiast who looked upon the audion tube as an electric light, thought it was going to explode. He jumped away from the instrument and out of the room, and did not venture near it for several hours, and then only after reaching round the corner of the door with a long stick and pulling the battery switch off.

Similar instances have come to attention when bulbs generate varicolored vapors in the vacuum chamber.

Moonshiners Using Radio.

Revenue officers seeking distillers of the far-famed and hard-hitting "white lightning," in the mountains of Kentucky say that many raids made in the last few months have proven unsuccessful, due to the adoption of radio-phones as a means of communication among the moonshiners.

TIPS TO THE RADIOIST

Fired .22 caliber rifle shells make good switch-points for tuning coils and receiving transformers.

A single wire aerial 100 to 150 feet long is sufficient for local and long distance reception of broadcasting stations.

Do not string aerials across the street or across electric wires. Keep antenna wires off electric light and telephone poles.

Stranded copper or solid copper wire should be used. Phosphor bronze wire if obtainable is stronger but not superior to copper.

Good contact with a piece of mineral like galena can be had by wrapping it in tinfoil. Of course, the top of the crystal is left exposed.

The brass ends of large cartridge shells make splendid crystal detector cups. They should be cleaned out thoroughly before they are used.

The winding of cardboard tubes from oatmeal boxes may be improved greatly if the tube is first heated in an oven for about 15 minutes to take out the moisture and then wound; or better still shellac it while it is still warm and leave it to soak in.

In winding tuning coils with bare wire a thread should be wound on with the wire. This will separate each turn. When the coil is finished the thread can be taken off. Shellac should be applied immediately. When the shellac is dry the copper wire will hold its place.

CHERISH WORLD WAR RELIC

Pillar From Altar of Church in Ruined Village of Belleau at National Headquarters.

One of the most treasured of the many World war relics being gathered at the American Legion's national headquarters, Indianapolis, Ind., is that just received from the battlefields of France. It is a pillar from the altar of a church which once stood in the ruined village of Belleau, adjacent the famed wood of that name, near Chateau-Thierry.

The wooden pillar bears honorable scars, those suffered when scores of German high-explosive shells crashed into the little church. One shell fragment all but tore the pillar in halves, but when the marines and the infantry had driven back the enemy and recaptured the town, far beneath the mass of stone and mortar the altar was found intact.

Upon returning to their devastated home the French villagers looked upon the little altar as a good omen and set about to clear up their ruined church building. Later they removed one of the altar pillars, and after appropriate ceremonies, sent it to America as the gift of appreciation of the commune of Belleau to the Yankee regiments, through their organization of the Legion. The pillar is carefully preserved at the Legion's headquarters, protected by the French and American flags.

Robert Roberts, Former Commander of Ohio Department, Will Direct Disbursement.

The payment of $25,000,000 to nearly a quarter of a million of ex-service men is the task which has been assigned to Robert R. Roberts of Youngstown, O., former vice-commander of the Ohio department of the American Legion. Mr. Roberts is director of adjusted compensation in Ohio.

A sergeant major in the Thirty-seventh division during the World war, Mr. Roberts has been employed in the Carnegie Steel mills in Youngstown. His selection by the state sinking fund commission was regarded as a victory for the American Legion, which has endeavored to keep the payment operations of the compensation law out of politics.

Ohio is paying $10 for every month's service to a maximum of $250 to all World war fighters.

AIDS SICK AND WOUNDED MEN

Mrs. Maud Cudworth, Milwaukee, Wis., Is Known to Legion Boys Throughout the Mid-West.

Sick and wounded service men of the World war undergoing treatment in Indiana, Illinois, Iowa, Wisconsin, Ohio, West Virginia, Kentucky, Kansas and Missouri know or are going to know before the year is out of Mrs. Maud R. Cudworth, Milwaukee, Wis., a national vice president of the American Legion Auxiliary.

It is the duty of local units of the Auxiliary in towns where ex-service men are in hospitals to keep the disabled men supplied with little comforts and delicacies not provided by the government. The women write letters to the patients, send them newspapers, books, magazines, fruit, bathrobes, bed slippers, candy, cigarettes and special articles that they desire. Under Mrs. Cudworth's supervision, as president of the national welfare committee of the Auxiliary, this work is being done in the middle western states over which she has supervision. Mrs. Cudworth personally visits disabled service men in the hospitals of her territory, hears their complaints and takes them up with the proper government officials.

A Legion post of 1,000 men in Milwaukee adopted Mrs. Cudworth as "Mother" because she lost her only son during the World war.

There were two kinds of profiteers during the war—one had the other good—the service men of Le Sueur, Minn., claim. One of the latter lives in Le Sueur and wears a cannon-metal decoration for the work which she did during the war to aid the various drives and the service men. She is Mrs. Henrietta A. Starkey, owner of a moving picture theater, whose constant willingness to throw open the doors of her amusement house for Liberty bond, Red Cross and other campaigns won her the plaudits of all and caused her bank account to diminish.

One of the things which Mrs. Starkey did to arouse war-time morale was to show the pictures of all the boys from Le Sueur who were in the service—237 in all. Lights and heat in her theater were all furnished gratis for war-time community gatherings.

The cost of the films which were often shown at the Starkey theater was borne by its proprietor and the funds to help the service men were augmented so much more.

Le Sueur Legionnaires hold Mrs. Starkey up as the unusual who profited in their good will instead of cash.

GERMANY'S BIG LOSS IN WAR

Deaths Directly Traceable to the World Conflict Are Placed at About 12,000,000.

A study of the official records of the German war department shows that 46 men were killed and 100 wounded on the German side during every hour the World war raged. This estimate was arrived at after the archives had been probed by General Von Altkrock, one of the German "high command."

It is also stated in the same report that the Kaiser had a total of 13,000,000 men under arms during the war, of which 1,908,548 were either killed outright or died of wounds or sickness incident to their service. The largest figures are those of the number of Germans wounded which General Altkrock places at 4,246,779.

German deaths, directly traceable to the war, are placed at about 12,000,000.

Carrying On With the American Legion

Farmers gave 200 trees and the village gave a lot to the Elizabethtown (Ind.) post of the Legion when it wanted a community home.

A "Gold Star" Legion organization, open to parents, sisters and brothers of men who gave their lives in the World war, has been proposed.

A total of $83,000,000 yearly renewable term and converted government insurance is being carried by ex-service men in the state of Washington.

War-time draft dodgers are prohibited from holding public office in New York state, a bill sponsored by the Legion to that effect having passed the general assembly.

Legion posts have been formed in Calcutta, India, New Zealand and Denmark, making a total of 11,000 posts located in practically every civilized country on the globe.

If You Need a Medicine
You Should Have the Best

Have you ever stopped to reason why it is that so many products that are extensively advertised, all at once drop out of sight and are soon forgotten? The reason is plain—the article did not fulfill the promises of the manufacturer. This applies more particularly to a medicine. A medicinal preparation that has real curative value almost sells itself, as like as evidence chain system the remedy is recommended by those who have been benefited, to those who are in need of it. A prominent druggist says "Take for example Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, a preparation I have sold for many years and never hesitate to recommend, for in almost every case it shows excellent results, as many of my customers testify. No other kidney remedy has so large a sale."

According to sworn statements and verified testimony of thousands who have used the preparation, the success of Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root is due to the fact so many people claim, that it fulfills almost every wish in overcoming kidney, liver and bladder ailments; corrects urinary troubles and neutralizes the uric acid which causes rheumatism.

You may receive a sample bottle of Swamp-Root by Express Post. Address Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y., and enclose ten cents, also mention this paper. Large and medium size bottles for sale at all drug stores. Advertisement

POULTRY

MARKET FOR YOUNG GUINEAS

Best Season is During Latter Part of Summer and Fall—Sell Best With Feathers On.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

The marketing season for guinea fowl is during the latter part of summer, and throughout the fall. At this time the demand in the city markets is for young birds weighing from one to two pounds each. At about two and one-half months old guineas weigh from one to one and one-half pounds, and at this size they begin reaching the markets in August. As the season advances the demand is for heavier birds.

The usual practice in marketing game birds is to place them on the market unplucked, and in most markets guineas are sold this way. They appear more attractive with feathers on, and sell more readily. Dressed, the small size and dark color of the skin are likely to prejudice the prospective customer who may be unfamiliar with the bird's excellent eating qualities. For hotel and restaurant trade, however, guineas should be dressed in the same way as common fowl. Better ask the dealer, before shipping, whether he wants the feathers on or off.

The Department of Agriculture has learned that if the feathers are to be left on the birds all that is necessary in preparing for market is to bleed them by severing the principal blood vessels of the neck, allowing them to hang head downward until bleeding is complete.

If the feathers are to be removed, it should be done by dry picking. When the brain is pierced after severing the blood vessels in the neck the feathers are loosened by a convulsive movement of the muscles and can be removed easily.

TO AVOID POULTRY DISEASES

Health of Fowls Depends Almost Entirely Upon Clean Quarters and Right Feed.

Many people who raise poultry spend money for remedies for ailments in their flock which they could prevent if they would realize that the health of poultry depends almost entirely upon clean quarters and proper feeding.

Few poultry diseases are caused by anything but lack of precaution. A leaky roof causes damp litter. Lack of litter under roosts causes a damp and foul house under a good roof. Cracks in the floor or sides mean drafts. Lack of clean scratch litter means lack of exercise and reduced vigor.

Lack of balanced rations means a tendency towards digestive troubles. No grit helps to keep feed from being properly digested. Too tight quarters cause them to become damp, foul-smelling and unhealthy. Lack of ventilation causes poultry to lose in vitality. Colds are caused by dusty houses and exposure to moisture and cold.

POULTRY NOTES

Put your eggs in cold storage via the waterglass route.

Keep the baby chicks hungry at all times. Never feed too much.

Pinches of sodium fluorid in the feathers will rid a hen of lice.

Scatter air-slaked lime freely about the houses and yards; it will go a long way towards preventing disease.

Alfalfa meal and wheat bran are, perhaps, the most common "bones" for chick growing mash and they are hard to excel.

Alfalfa meal should be in all mash rations and it will pay to encourage the chicks or fowls to eat as much of it as possible. It makes for greater capacity.

Don't sell the hens because the price of eggs is low and prices for the hens high. Keep plenty of hens to lay eggs for home use and to sell next winter when prices are up.

WORK OF LARVA IN INTERIOR OF CORN-STALK

European Corn Borer in Various Stages and Its Work.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Special efforts to prevent the European corn borer from spreading to the corn belt, which it now threatens to do from the southern shore of Lake Erie, will be made this season by the United States Department of Agriculture. The most important single measure will be the rigid enforcement of federal quarantine regulations by the federal horticultural board of the department, in co-operation with the Canadian government and the various states where the pest now exists. This will prevent other infestations of the insect from coming into the United States and will go a long way toward keeping the borer from being carried to other parts of the country.

The bureau of entomology of the department has prepared its plans for investigating the insect, which was discovered in this country during 1917, with a view to applying and amplifying methods of controlling it. The slight infestations along the lake shore, it is believed, will not cause serious injury to corn there immediately, giving ample time for a careful study of the insect and its behavior in this new environment before actual commercial damage is done. For this purpose the bureau will establish immediately a number of entomologists at Sandusky, Ohio.

May Have Come From Canada.

The infestation on Lake Erie, it is believed, originated in the province of Ontario, Canada, where a severe infestation has been present for several years. Favorable winds during the flight season of the moth in the summer of 1921 are supposed to have compelled the adult insects to fly across the lake to the American side, where they became established along almost the entire southern shore. Records of the weather bureau indicate that for the first time in five or six years the winds prevailing then blew from the north or northwest for several days at a time. It is not thought, therefore, that this condition will prevail again for several years, and other moths be blown over.

In order to watch this phase of the matter, however, the bureau of entomology will request permission of the lighthouse service to station observers during the flight season at the powerful lights maintained along the southern shore. They will ascertain, if possible, whether moths are attracted to the lights from the other side.

The federal quarantine includes 144 cities and towns in Massachusetts, three in Michigan, 12 in New Hampshire, 115 in New York, 42 in Ohio, and 13 in Pennsylvania, and prohibits the shipment of corn and broom corn, including all parts of the stalk, cut flowers or entire plants of chrysanthemum, aster, cosmos, zinnia, hollyhock, and cut flowers or entire plants of gladiolus and dahlia, except the bulbs, to other states throughout the year. The ban applies to other products for the period between June 1 and December 31, in the New England territory. The prohibition applies to corn and broom corn, including all parts of the stalk, all sorghums and sudan grass from infested areas in New York, Pennsylvania, Ohio, and Michigan throughout the year. No restrictions are placed on the interstate movement of clean shelled corn and clean seed of broom corn.

Control Practices Recommended.

To control the corn borer on the farm, the department recommends the following practices:

1. Burn, or otherwise destroy, before May 1 of each year, all chrysanthemums, corn cobs, corn stubble, vegetable field and flower crop remnants, weeds and large-stemmed grasses of the previous year.
2. Keep cultivated fields, fence rows, field borders, roadsides and such places free from large weeds or large-stemmed grasses.
3. Cut corn close to the ground.
4. Cut and remove sweet corn fodder from the field as soon as the ears are harvested. Feed direct to live stock or place in silo.
5. Cut and remove field corn from the field as soon as the ears are mature. Feed the stalks to live stock as soon as possible and burn or otherwise dispose of the uneaten parts before May 1 following. Shred or cut the fodder to increase its consumption.
6. Flow under thoroughly, in the fall, all infested cornstalks, corn stubble, other crop remnants, weeds and similar material which it is impractical to destroy in any other manner. When necessary to adopt this practice an attempt should be made to plow under all the material to a depth of at least 6 inches.
7. Plant small areas of early sweet corn to act as a trap crop, adjacent to fields intended for field corn or late sweet corn. Feed, or otherwise destroy, this early sweet corn, as soon as the ears are harvested, or preferably just before that period, if the grower is willing to sacrifice the ears. Such plantings, where not destroyed at the proper time, constitute a menace to later corn.

8. Limit the size of cornfields to areas that can be kept free of weeds.

9. Do not plant corn within 50 feet of beets, beans, celery, spinach, rhubarb, or flowering plants intended for sale.

10. Do not throw the uneaten parts of cornstalks used as feed or bedding into the manure pile unless this material is worked into piles containing enough fresh horse manure to produce heating.

11. Do not transport outside of the infested area, any of the plants, or plant products, listed in Federal Quarantine No. 43.

12. Do not transport any living stages of the European corn-borer outside of the infested areas.

13. Do not place in swill container any sweet corn ears or portions thereof or discarded portions of celery, beets, beans, rhubarb, and spinach when this material is suspected of containing the borer.

14. Do not dump cornstalks, or other plant refuse from the vegetable and flower garden on public dumps nor on the edge or flood level of brooks, rivers, and other bodies of water.

15. Do not attempt to circumvent the quarantine regulations. The penalty is severe.

16. Do not mix products grown within the infested area with those grown outside the infested area.

17. Do not label packages containing flowers or other products with misleading statements of contents.

18. Do not pack produce in boxes or other containers until all old tags and permits have been removed.

19. Do not feel angry if products are confiscated at border lines for violation of quarantine regulations. Such action is the most lenient that may be taken under the law.

Taught Approved Methods by Extension Workers and Representatives of Biological Survey—Prizes for Gophers.

Moleskins, which brought little or nothing in the ordinary fur markets, have been successfully pooled and sold in Washington and Oregon through farm bureau organizations. Boys and girls in many communities have formed clubs for trapping moles. Through the co-operative work of the extension agents and representatives of the biological survey of the United States Department of Agriculture, they have been taught approved methods of trapping and skinning the moles.

Two hundred and twenty mole pelts were sold in Benton county, Ore., for boy and girl trappers. Linn county, Ore., reports three communities which offered 10 cents each for moles and pocket gophers and an additional prize for the three children killing the most pests. One community reports 83 moles killed in this way.

OVERCOME PLANT DISEASES

Practical Plan to Allow Land to Remain Idle or Use Crop Immune to Ailment.

There are several diseases of vegetables which live over in the garden soil from year to year, and if the same crop is planted in the same soil year after year it will be but a short time until the crop will prove a loss. These are mostly fungous and bacterial diseases and the only practical way to overcome them is to allow the land to lie idle for two or three years or to plant a crop which is immune to the disease.
